Pawnshop Vault Houses Section of Thorn Crown Placed On Christ's Brow

NEW YORK, Dec. 27.—(AP)—A 16th century reliquary purported to contain a section of the crown of thorns which Roman soldiers placed on the brow of Christ before the crucifixion, is reposing in the vaults of a New York pawnbroker, the Evening Post says today.

The art dealer who placed it there attributes its ownership to Archduke Ludwig, brother-in-law of former Empress Zita. The sacred relic, one of the most interesting in the world, if genuine, is said to have been held in the Austrian royal family since the 16th century.

The supposed portion of the crown of thorns is set in a jeweled compartment surrounded by figures of the Virgin Mary, St. John, and angels. The compartment is lined with pearls and emeralds, one of 10 carats. The whole is encased in a black box.

Another portion of the thorny crown is supposed to exist in the collection of holy relics in the cathedral of Notre Dame of Paris. Only special visitors are allowed to view the thorns and then only on holy days.

MERCURY LOWEST HERE EARLY MORN

The coldest temperature of the winter so far was reached between 7:30 and 9 o'clock this morning when the mercury fell to 18 degrees above, following a cold night with a temperature of 20 above at 5 a. m., making last night also the coldest one so far. Ruth Chatterton at Craterian Sunday

Heralded as the greatest advance since the coming of talkies, the Fox Craterian theater will present Ruth Chatterton tomorrow in "The Right to Love," the first big picture using the Western Electric new process noiseless recording.

RUTH CHATTERTON

This revolutionary new process developed by sound engineers through years of study, marks a great step forward in the perfection of talkies. Its introduction in Medford is just one more indication that Fox West Coast theaters are fulfilling their promise to the public to continually improve talking picture presentation, and to make these improvements as soon as possible.
