WILD BEAUTY

by MATEEL HOWE FARNHAM

SYNOPSIS: The shadow of her mother-in-law's hatred dims the happiness of Fanny Frost from the day she marries David. Only to Bob Daniels does she feel free to tell her troubles. Bob is married unhappily to Leila. David's wealthy cousin. He loves Fanny, and is torn with pity for her plight. Fanny and David attend a costume ball on Hallowe'en, but a quarrel has put them both in a bad humor. Bob appears at the party and persuades Fanny, who has had a good deal of champagne to fight her depression, to run away with him. He telephones the news back to Leila. David learns of it when he returns from the party. Meanwhile Fanny, sobering as Bob's car speeds on, forces him to give up his mad plan and bring her back.

Chapter 27

REBELLION AT LAST

WHEN Fanny entered the house she was still in the grip of the single idea that she must end David's suffering. She should have insisted upon seeing him alone, but, on the verge of hysteria, she could not think clearly.

"It's all right, darling," she got out somehow.

David did not answer her.

"All right?" Mrs. Frost's voice scourged like a whip. "You spent the night with Robert Daniels and call that all right?"

"I didn't—didn't spend the night with him. I've done nothing wrong!" cried Fanny, wringing her hands.

"Then where have you been?"

"I don't know. We went in the car—about two hours from here."

"By 'we' you mean yourself and Robert Daniels?"

"Yes. I drank champagne at the party . . . and Bob came . . . and made me think I wanted to go away with him. But I didn't. After an hour I found that I didn't. I tried to telephone . . . but the telephone wasn't working. I made Bob bring me back."

"Where did you try to telephone?"

"From the hotel."

Mrs. Frost pounced on this.

"So you went to a hotel? You tried to telephone from a hotel?"

"Yes, oh, yes, but I did nothing wrong. I sat in a chair—just as I am now. Bob locked the door—I couldn't get out. Bob said he would bring me home as soon as it was daylight. And he did. That's all there is to it. I did nothing wrong."

"You don't call it wrong to go off with a married man, the father of five children? To bring ruin and disgrace on your child and husband—on a family that accepted you and took you in—on a family that never had the slightest touch of scandal—until you came—"

Fanny had been pushed a little too far; suddenly she went berserk. She sprang to her feet, as if preparing for physical combat.

"I won't answer any more of your questions. You have no right to question me—you bad, wicked, jealous old woman. You hate me; you've always hated me. You've tried to take my child away from me. Now you're trying to make David believe I've done wrong with another man—and you know in your heart I haven't." Fanny's voice rose almost to a scream. "I may be cheap and common and foolish, but I'm not hard and cruel and relentless. I'm not as bad as you are. My heart at least is clean. And yours is black. I've been afraid of you; but I'm not afraid of you any more. I—"

"David, will you allow this woman to speak in that manner to your mother?"

David spoke at last.

"Fanny, go upstairs."

"Upstairs? I'm going out of this house as fast as I can go. And I'm never coming back. If you believe what your mother believes, stay with her. Or you can come with me and Sheila. She—" Her voice broke.

David brushed his hand across his eyes and stared dully at his wife. He could not reason anything out. Hour after hour he had pictured Fanny in Bob Daniels' arms—his Fanny—his own girl—spoiled to him forever. Fanny had come back—had denied. But Fanny, cornered and in trouble, had always denied.

"We are all somewhat hysterical," he said at last, speaking slowly and distinctly. "We had better discuss this later." He turned to Fanny but avoided her eyes. "You will not leave this house," he commanded sternly.

Fanny went by him, cheeks aflame, head higher than ever. Leona, the cook, who had listened outside the door, stopped her in the hall. She got Fanny upstairs, persuaded her to take a bath, helped her into street clothes, packed her bag, found her pocketbook, brought her coffee.

"But where you figuring on go ing?" asked Leona. "You can't just go walking around. You got to go somewhere."

"You hate me; you've always hated me!" Fanny cried.

"I'll go to New York, to Lena," she said tonelessly. "You must take care of Sheila until I can get her." Leona knew that Lena was Fanny's old nurse.

"All right," soothed Leona, "now you get a few things together while I go up in the attic after your suitcase." She went of course straight to David.

"Davey, Mis' Fanny's figuring on going down to New York to visit Mis' Lena."

"I told her to stay here," he said stubbornly.

"She ain't in a mood where words will hinder her much. But maybe if you was to go and talk to her . . "

David was in his study, a small room back of the library.

"Will you please bring me some coffee in here," he said. "And shut the door as you go out."

There was a train leaving for New York in half an hour. But Fanny missed the train by a hair's breadth. And there on the platform was Bob. When he told Fanny he would take her to New York she went with him without a word. A dozen people saw him put her in the car and drive away. Mrs. Frost broke the news to David.

"Fanny has gone away again—with that man," she said grimly. "This time I daresay she will stay with him."

In New York at eleven o'clock that same night a dust-covered roadster drew up in front of a delicatessen shop on lower Sixth avenue, near Washington Square. A tall man and a woman alighted. In the dim-lighted, dun-colored doorway the man looked at the woman hungrily.

"You're sure?" the man asked hoarsely. The woman nodded and shrank away from him.

"I'm sorry," she said gently and closed the door.

Bob never saw Fanny Frost again.

Triumphant at last over Fanny, Mrs. Frost begins tomorrow to make sure the separation will be permanent.

ITALIAN FASCISM SPURNS HUN TYPE

ROME, Dec. 20.—(AP) Despite recent statements by Mussolini that the fascist idea is worldwide in scope and that the fascist revolution is still in progress, the Italian party is not taking kindly to unauthorized visits of "fascist" groups from other countries.

A distinctly cool reception was accorded a group of German "steel helmets" who visited Rome this fall.

The Germans were dressed in full uniform, with Sam Browne belts, military caps, hobnailed boots and numerous badges. Their arrival was heralded in the fascist newspapers, but official recognition was pointedly lacking.

An attempt to be received by the Duce failed dismally and the fascist official press office let it be known that the government was "somewhat annoyed" at the publicity given the group's arrival.

Because he walked from behind a truck and into the path of R. R. Standen's motorcycle without looking, thus causing a crash, at Maidstone, England, William Gibson has been ordered by the court to pay $470 damages to Standen.

The trustees of Annabaugh Hibernian Hall at Annabaugh, Ireland, which was burned recently, have filed a claim with the Armagh county council for $10,000 because the building was not sufficiently protected by policemen against the raiders who caused the blaze.

Scots throughout the world have been asked to help erect a memorial to S. R. Crockett, the distinguished Scotch novelist, to be erected in Galloway, Scotland.
