Masked Longing A ROMANCE OF RADIO

SYNOPSIS: Aileen Gray becomes a "masked" singer on the radio when an accident disfigures her, ending her Broadway stage career. Dwight Channing, artist, takes a peculiar mask to cover her scars. But these very scars are the key to her success.

Channing caught her roughly in his arms. "Can you think that I invented the woman in the mask?" "No, but Kronberg thinks so—or pretends he does. What is your knowledge to—do you suppose I'd imitate Aileen in order to clear myself?"

"I thought things over as I drove," he said. "Unless you'd rather not, you'd better come back with me. Kronberg may not find it out."

Half an hour later Channing's car was speeding along the Roosevelt Boulevard. Vivienne sat in silence and he made no effort to break it.

Channing deftly switched the subject. He sketched his plan of Vivienne's going to the studio, so that Aileen could visit with her without their being observed.

"Oh, it would have been ideal!—except for what has happened. In fact, I'm not sure that I ought to go to New York at all."

"Where else would you go?" he asked, and Vivienne shook her head. "I don't know," she said slowly.

"Of course! Viv, you've got to begin to think of someone besides yourself. Aileen wants and needs you."

Vivienne almost hated him for reminding her of that. For almost an hour they motored on, each speaking at the Medford high school.

Besides a program of songs and readings, the chain store question will be debated by a team of students who have studied the situation from every angle and are all "pepped up" to make a winning argument.

The program will begin at 8 o'clock and will be open to the public. After the program a jitney supper will be served by the H. E. committee.

again avoiding all effort at conversation. Then as the car was passing an old, abandoned farm, Channing averted it abruptly through the entrance gates. He ran along the weed-grown road, past a ramshackle barn, and brought the radiator to a stop under a stump of trees.

"What's the matter?" Vivienne asked, surprised at the set of his jaw. "There's something I'm going to say to you—and I'm going to say it now." Channing answered grimly. "You've behaved like a spoiled kid long enough. I don't mind telling you, frankly, that I'm sick of it!"

She could hardly believe this was Channing, there in the car beside her. That tone from any other man would have thrown her into a panic. Yet she knew that it was Channing brought back her old diabliette.

"Oh, really!" She laughed unpleasantly. It was true that she'd asked him to help her, but she was not proposing to listen to any curflew lecture!

"Yes, really!" he snapped and faced her. "I'm going to ask a few questions—and I want the truth, in the first place—honestly—did you fire that shot at Kronberg?"

"No!" she faltered and hung her head. "But I—I suppose he thought so."

"Naturally." Channing nodded. "You'd have no right to shoot him after that admission. But it's evident from your account of what he said last night that he doesn't want you now. I told you once that I didn't myself. No doubt you remember that?"

"I shan't ever forget it!" She looked away from him. "Well, then don't let your resentment prompt you to give some other man—the impression you gave Kronberg."

"Oh, you!" She writhed under his gaze, and it was pitiless. "I told you I'd something to say to you—and you're going to hear it. This world has no room for half-way girls. Even a decent man can respect a woman who's frankly—foolish. But the attempt can do no use for one who just pretends."

"Dwight! Dwight!" Viv almost screamed. Kronberg had practically told her as much. Now Channing reconfirmed it.

Neither of them wanted her. She was something beyond the pale—lower than an outcast! So that was their opinion. It lashed her like a whip.

But Channing had cooled her too far. If this was their creed, she'd show them—it only to prove she was not the sort both of them despised.

"Well!" she demanded and tossed her head. "Since you've made that perfectly clear—suppose I say I'm converted—that'll cease to be a half-way? I tell you I mean what I said to you—what I let Kronberg believe—what everybody thinks!"

Instead of answering, Channing caught her roughly in his arms. (Copyright, 1931, by The Mackay Co.)
