

New York Evening Post Of Revolutionary War Vintage In Possession Of R. L. Ray

(By Eva Newton)
They might well be used as titles on modern talkies, the names of plays listed in the New York Evening Post, published November 7, 1782, "Adventures of a Night," "Mysterious Husband," and "Fatal Curiosity" they read. But there are other advertisements in the yellowed and crumpled old newspaper, R. L. Ray of this city brought out of his vault yesterday, that brand it passing.

Leading the list is one in the form of a column announcing the sale of a "capital house, distillery and sugar house, two stills of 200 gallons each with worm tubes and cisterns." Dress goods imported from Europe with names that the modern wife would never connect with frocks are also among the ads.

LOCAL MEN HOME FROM SOJOURN IN DESERT COUNTRY

Happy to be back again in this great country and to again be addressed by the local populace as Pete, after a month's absence spent in attending the special camp session of the Woodmen of the World Order at Denver and points in Arizona and Old Mexico, P. M. Kershaw arrived home yesterday and will now get busy looking after his duties as city councilman and attending to his personal business.

Mr. Kershaw arrived in Denver on January 8, and immediately after the W. O. W. head camp session, departed for Tucson, Ariz. on January 18, from where, after looking after that section, he visited Nogales in old Mexico, whose wetness was a welcome relief to him after a sojourn in the dry country. Then he went to Phoenix, Ariz., and was noting around that city when he was aggressively surprised by an across an old college chum, R. A. Kroschel, another well known Medford man, who at sight of him did not call the police.

The two local tourists from then on browsed around Phoenix and vicinity together with much enjoyment until the Navajo Indians got to familiarly addressing them as Pete and Sam. The duo can't try to combine business with pleasure it is said, the formerly naturally looking over the field for selling monuments, and the latter from force of habit looking over the possibilities of selling ice and butter in that section.

Incidentally Mr. Kershaw brought home with him two fine Navajo blankets which he purchased from a squaw and which were manufactured by the Pendleton Woolen Mills, and Mr. Kroschel brought home some beautiful hand carved native silver trinkets and some valuable bead ornaments, which two Indians unloaded on him and which Sam was then unaware could be bought at any Woolworth store. However, neither had his pockets picked.

From Phoenix the two Medfordites went over the Apache trail and visited the great Roosevelt dam, although they had encountered many other dams in their dealings with the Indians, and by way of other diversion visited the Grand Canyon together from where the news leaked out at home that they were at large in that territory.

They next visited Casa Grande, Ariz., and the Walnut national monument where they looked over and studied the ancient cliff dwellers' habitats to such an extent that they came home as experts on old stuffs.

Then they parted company, and Mr. Kroschel arrived back in Medford Sunday and Mr. Kershaw yesterday, the latter having stopped en route home at Winters, Cal., to visit his brother-in-law, E. D. Cox, and family, former residents of Medford. Mrs. Kershaw and Mrs. Cox are sisters.

Both Sam and Pete were so fed up on fiery food while away that the mere mention of chili con carne, hot tamales and the like makes them rush for some good old Medford pure mountain spring water, which was the greatest thing they missed while away from home.

MRS. STEWARD IN TELEVISION SHOW ON VISIT IN EAST

Mrs. Adrienne Steward of this city was one of 80 fortunate women who participated in the two-way television demonstration recently conducted by the Bell Telephone Laboratories in New York City, according to a letter received yesterday by her husband, C. T. Steward.

Mrs. Steward, who has been spending several weeks in the east visiting markets in the interests of her local shop, was guest in the home of one of the chief engineers of the Bell company when the experiment was made. He invited her to attend the demonstration with a group of women visitors to the mid-winter convention of the American Institute of Electrical Engineers.

Forty of the women sat in the laboratories and forty in similar booths at the American Telephone and Telegraph building, 125 Broadway, some distance away.

"For three hours they conducted conversations and watched images of their friends thrown on little square screens before them." The New York Evening Journal states in reporting the demonstration, "So perfectly organized was the television equipment that the images were not in the least blurred or disturbed. The person at the other end of the wire seemed not more than nine or ten feet away. The illusion was that of a talking picture."

"Television has made enormous strides in the past four years," declared E. L. Younke at the laboratories. "We intend eventually to develop it along commercial lines. Although now only the head and shoulders of the other party may be seen, the entire body will probably be viewed if the program continues."

In her letter accompanying the newspaper clipping Mrs. Steward described the sensation she realized in telephoning as "wonderful."

Mrs. Steward is now enroute west and will return to Medford in about two weeks.
