LOTS OF CHEEK to vivacious Nancy Carroll when she breaks out into a smile like this. Nancy, you know, is in the talkies, but you may also have heard her over the radio.

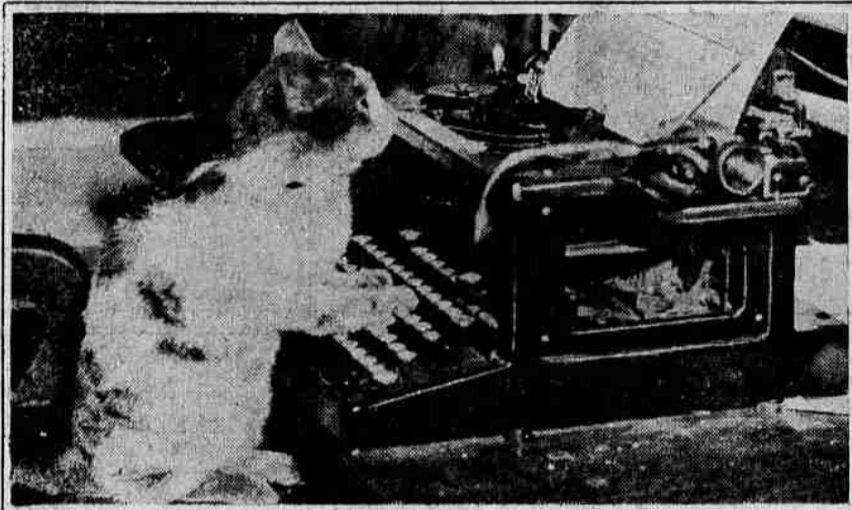

ART FOR ART'S sake is the motto of lovely Eva Le Gallienne, above, who has refused attractive stage contracts to play as a member of the cast in her own repertory theater in New York.

THAT NO TWO SCULPTORS SAW ABRAHAM LINCOLN ALIKE is interestingly illustrated in the layout above. The 15-foot high bust on the left is the realistic work of G. G. Barnhard. The head above, done by Leonard Cruelle, is at Freeport, Ill., while the bust below stands in statuary hall in the Capitol at Washington. These three memorials, as well as countless others, are honored on the 122nd anniversary of Lincoln's birth, Feb. 12.

THE CAMERAMAN DIDN'T GET A TUMBLE, which was perhaps what he was waiting around for, but he did get this striking action photo of Italian cavalrymen as they successfully took an obstacle during a race at Rome. They are reputed to be the best horsemen in the world.

KITTEN ON THE KEYS—You'll have to award this feline the typewriter ribbon for efficiency, for they say he's new secretary, to the inspector of a Pittsburgh, Pa., police station. "Tommy" is his name.

PLENTY STORIES to William Van Alen, don't you think? There should be, anyway, for he represented the Chrysler tower at the itzy Beaux Arts costume ball in New York recently.

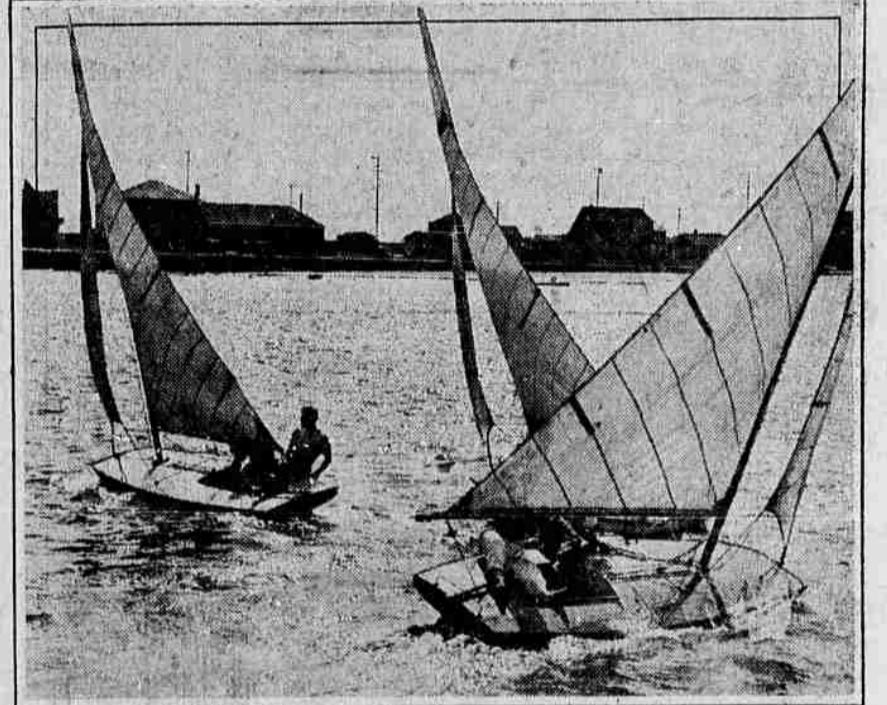

WHAT, NO ORANGES?—A sight not often seen in sunny California is one like that above. Here are a group of Californians getting a taste of winter on the toboggan slide at Lake Tahoe, where the 1932 Olympic game winter sports tryouts are to be held in February.

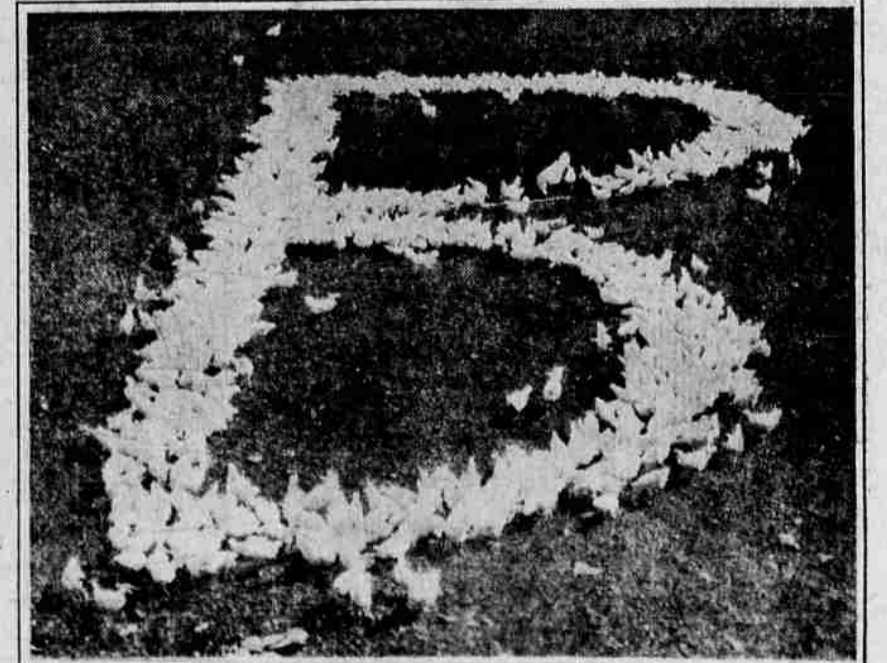

CALLED THE MOST SCENIC HARBOR IN AMERICAN WATERS, the beautiful crescent of Avalon Bay, at Catalina Island, is shown here in a picturesque view as the steamers Catalina and Avalon arrived from the mainland with hundreds of visitors for the opening of the mid-winter season. Notice the celebrated casino in the background.

BATON AVERAGE is high for these distinguished orchestra conductors. From top to bottom are: Ossip Gabrilowitch, leader of the Detroit Symphony orchestra; Arturo Toscanini, director of the New York Philharmonic orchestra, and Eino Raapee, conductor of the famed Roxv symphony.

BUOYS WILL BE BUOYS, especially when it comes to rounding the last one in an exciting skimmer race such as this. Three of the craft which competed in the skimmer regatta at Newport Bay, near Los Angeles, Calif., recently, are shown fighting for position at the turning point on the home stretch.

CLOSE RUB IN THIS SPELLIN' BEE—Speaking of intellectual birds, these pure-bred leghorns at a chicken farm in Brady, Texas, certainly know their alphabet. Although a few stragglers are disturbing the continuity of the formation, you get an idea of what letter they are trying to spell out.
