Smith and Stennett Among Those Who Participated In Oklahoma Land Rush In '93

(By Ernest Rostel) Their experiences in the Oklahoma Cherokee Strip land rush of 1893 were recalled today by two local newspaper men, S. Stennett and A. F. Stennett, after memories of stirring days had been revived by viewing "Cimarron," Edna Ferber's story, playing at Holly theatre.

Attracted by the opening of the strip over 200 miles long and over 40 miles wide, these two men spent days in preparation for the run. Mr. Stennett purchased a second hand printing outfit for the establishment of a newspaper in the newly opened lands. He paid a man $5 for hauling the outfit a long distance to have it available for use when the land was officially opened.

Thousands of people came to register, and it was no easy task to obtain a registration certificate. Mr. Stennett related. He arrived at Stillwater, Okla., where there was a big rush for registration certificates. Here the lines were nearly three miles in length, but through the acquaintance of a registration clerk he went into a booth through a back way and obtained his certificate.

Orlando was on a railroad and trains carried many of the land seekers into the new territory. Mr. Smith managed to get aboard the second train and came to a town site the name of which he has now forgotten. He laid claim to a lot but only a day before returning to Kansas. With a partner, he spent some time in Orlando, Okla., waiting for the opening of the land. There were thousands of people waiting for the starting gun and there was a big rush for registration certificates. Here the lines were nearly three miles in length, but through the acquaintance of a registration clerk he went into a booth through a back way and obtained his certificate.

Mr. Stennett, now the composing room foreman for the Mail Tribune, still has his certificate of registration and believes it is one of the few in existence at the present time. He also has a receipt for fees for a permit to work on lands in the Choctaw Indian nation, which he was for a short time before he left the territory.

Seven members of Mr. Frank Gully lost their lives in the tornado at Pecos, Okla., in May, 1929, when over 50 were killed.

News has been received in the city that Edison Marshall, the well known former Medford novelist and short story writer, who since leaving here with his family several years ago has been residing in Georgia, will arrive in the city the forenoon of next week.

He left New York city Thursday for Medford shortly after receipt of notice of the death of his father George E. Marshall, prominent merchant and resident of the city for 22 years, whose funeral was held yesterday afternoon, and is expected to arrive in Medford next Tuesday.
