THE CRIME IN THE DUTCH GARDEN

BY HERBERT ADAMS

SYNOPSIS: Mystery grinning the household of Annabelle Querdling will be solved only when the hand that pushed over a stone image and killed her is exposed. Aiding the investigation in the garden where the crime occurred is Jimmie Haswell, London lawyer, previously told by Evelyn Blake, Miss Querdling's niece, of death threats against the spinster, who was opposed to Evelyn's engagement to Lionel Duckworth. Questioning Evelyn's sister Marjorie, Police Superintendent Richmond learns that Duckworth, Dr. Netherton and Major Gresham were present on the night of the murder. The doctor had talked to Miss Querdling in the garden and had been accompanied to the gate by Marjorie who, returning, found her aunt dead, she declared.

Chapter 5

CLUES AND CONJECTURES

SUPERINTENDENT RICHMOND paused to allow Marjorie to compose herself. "You saw no one in the garden when you found your aunt?" he resumed.

She shook her head and continued.

"I ran to this room, to that door"—pointing to the glass doors opening into the garden—"and called Evelyn and Lionel, who were still singing. They went with me, but it was too late."

"Where did you see Major Gresham?"

"On the lawn, before I got to the house. I hardly noticed him as I hurried to tell Evelyn, but he waited and went with us. Then Lionel—Mr. Duckworth—went for Ben and Green, the chauffeur. They carried her in, and Lionel and Major Gresham sent for the doctor and the police."

Her distress was increasing, but Richmond asked if she had not been surprised at finding Major Gresham near the house.

"No," she replied. "He was Aunt Annabelle's greatest friend, and often came over in the summer to talk to her. I suppose he was on his way to the Dutch garden when I saw him."

Constable Roscoe, a sturdy young Yorkshireman with an honest red face and reddish hair, was glad to answer Jimmie's question as to the time of the tragedy.

"I got the message, sir, at ten-forty, when Green, the chauffeur, came for me, walking. He said the car was out of order. I hurried over on my bicycle, flashed my light on the scene—and wasn't satisfied, especially remembering them letters. So I went over first thing this morning and brought the superintendent along."

"Right not to be satisfied," commented his chief. "Wilful murder. What do you say, Mr. Haswell?"

"I'm afraid so," said Jimmie as he stooped to pick a small object off the floor. "You'll test the back of the figure for finger-prints?"

"Of course," said Richmond.

"There's another thing, sir," said Roscoe to his chief. "I was passing the main road outside here, about nine-fifteen last night and saw a car and a man beside it. He stood there for a time and then cranked up and drove off. He was a stranger to me, but I'd know him again. I didn't get the car's number, but it was from London—a small cheapish tourer. They said at the house there'd been no callers—and you heard the young lady just now."

"Nine-fifteen," reflected Jimmie. "That would be precious near the time the deed was done."

Evelyn, spared the shock of finding her aunt's body, seemed more composed under the superintendent's examination.

She and Lionel had been singing in the room where she now stood, she told Richmond, when Marjorie came in—so upset that she could scarcely be understood—and had pulled them outside, where Major Gresham joined them. Then Lionel had gone for Green and Ben, who had carried in her aunt. She said that Green, who had gone for Dr. Netherton, returned, saying he had left a message in the absence of the doctor.

"We were so shocked that at first we didn't think of the police, until Ben, the gardener, insisted on showing us how easily any one could have pushed the figure over. Yet"—she hesitated—"who could have done such an awful thing deliberately?"

"That is what we have to find out," Richmond spoke grimly. We must know what the people in the house were doing."

Evelyn thought for a moment or two. "Janet and Hetty should have been in the kitchen. Lionel found Green working on the car in the garage at the side of the house opposite this, facing the kitchen quarters. He sleeps over it."

Richmond looked at his notes. "He is under notice to go because he wanted to marry Janet Raynes, the parlormaid. Was he resentful?"

"I saw a strange car and a man beside it," Roscoe recalled.

"He was—and very rude, although we rather sympathized with him."

Richmond said that Green could have pushed the image over and been back on the job within three or four minutes.

"I questioned Ben Acres," put in Constable Roscoe. "He said he'd worked in his garden until dark and then smoked in his doorway. Both he and his wife agreed there'd been no callers."

The superintendent frowned but admitted that the information was important. "Were you surprised at seeing Major Gresham?" he questioned Evelyn, who declared that her aunt's old friend had often walked over through the gardens.

"Your sister and the doctor were more or less on guard in the lane and the gardener was at the main entrance. How did the major come?"

"He generally uses the bottom gate from the links."

"That leaves the gate beyond the garage to account for." Then abruptly Richmond changed the subject. "Your sister and the doctor are very good friends. Nothing more between them than that?"

"Nothing more, I think. We've known him all our lives."

"How long have you been engaged to Mr. Duckworth?" The unexpected question brought color to the girl's cheeks.

"Two months. We had just got engaged when we came to see Mr. Haswell in London," Evelyn said, looking at Jimmie.

"No. We had met only five weeks before we were engaged," was the reply, with a warmer color, "but I told her I loved Lionel and could not give him up. She said she would give me six months in which to get tired of him, and at the end of that time, I could marry."

It seemed for some moments that the superintendent had come to the end of his questions. He sat frowning at his notebook.

Seven Helps In One For Difficult Coughs From Colds

Creomulsion is a better help than some coughs need. It combines seven major helps in one, to do the best that men know for any cough from colds.

There is creosote—the world's supreme help—blended, emulsified and palatable. There are white pine tar, wild cherry bark, menthol, ipecac, etc. Each is best for a certain type of cough. But even doctors might disagree on what is best for yours.

So experts have combined in Creomulsion all major helps in one. This to deal with all conditions in a most effective way. No narcotic in it.

Creomulsion is for people who wish to do the utmost. In coughs from colds that hang on it is essential. One dare not trust such coughs to any lesser help. But don't you think that any cough calls for the best help known?

Creomulsion costs a little more than some helps—$1.25. But your druggist guarantees it. So it costs you nothing if you think it fails to render help that is quick and complete. Careful people, more and more, demand this maximum protection. Use it promptly.

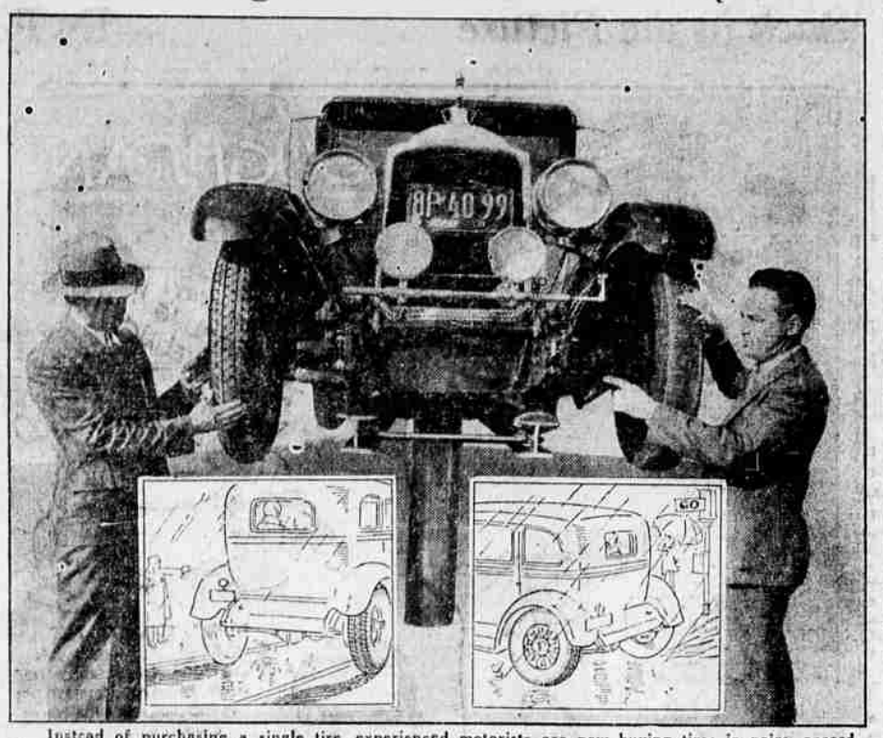
Purchasing Tires In Pairs Now Popular



Instead of purchasing a single tire, experienced motorists are now buying tires in pairs, according to the Western Auto Supply Company. Front tires should be alike for ease in steering, rear tires should be alike for greatest traction. Hoyt Aldrich, supervisor of tire construction for the supply company, calls attention to the need for tires with equal traction.
