RUM RUNNER ILL; BONDSMEN REMIT

Albino Walter Garten, a rum runner between San Francisco and Portland, was arrested on the Pacific highway in this vicinity on Jan. 24th last with 95 gallons of alcohol in his possession. It was not until today, due to a chain of circumstances, that he was fined $150 for that offense in Judge Taylor's court. At that, he did not appear in court, but a plea of guilty was entered by his attorney, T. J. Enright, at the request of his bondsmen. Immediately following his arrest last January, Garten was arraigned in Judge Taylor's court, reserved making his plea for 10 days, and was released on $750 bond, since which time nothing was heard from him until today. In fact, Attorney Enright only recently learned his client was ill in a California hospital. Thereupon Mr. Enright communicated with Garten's bondsmen at Portland, and the latter authorized him to enter a plea of guilty for Garten, inasmuch as Garten was not physically able to personally appear.

ROAD CONDITIONS VASTLY CHANGED VISITOR RECALLS

"N. S. Bennett, well known florist and nurseryman of Medford, was a visitor here today, accompanied by his son-in-law, daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Carlson of Oakland, Calif., and their son, Junior," says the Klamath Falls Herald. "They came by way of Green Springs highway and returned via Crater Lake. "Back in 1895, when Mrs. Carlson was a little girl, she made the trip over the old road from Ashland here with her father, and returned to Medford by much the same route they are traveling today," but, she said, "it was over a much different highway than we are traveling today. The first trip was made in a light wagon, and we did not make many miles in a day." "Mr. Carlson is an enthusiastic fisherman, and whenever vacation time arrives, he hits for the mountains and streams of Oregon."

YEOMEN PLANNING PICNIC ON SUNDAY

Arrangements are complete for the Yeomen picnic, Sunday, at Casey's Camp on the Crater Lake highway. While the outlook for sunshine is rather doubtful at this time, the committee is hoping for a bright day. The delegations from Ashland and Grants Pass will meet with the local lodge at the hall, Sunday morning, and the starting time has been set for 9:30. Sports of all kinds have been arranged and young and old will get a chance to try their skill in various ways. Basket dinner at noon, everyone bringing their own lunch and service. Coffee and ice cream will be furnished by the lodge. From present indications attendance this year will outclass previous records.

CURRENT RAINS MAY HURT HAY OF TABLE ROCK

TABLE ROCK, Ore., June 27.—(Spl.)—Rain that commenced Friday caught farmers here who had delayed their haying to escape the wet weather of a week ago so that nearly as much hay will be damaged as during the previous rains. Grain binders have been at work in this district this week and several fields of barley and other early grain have been cut. The county rock crushing outfit which has been at the works for the past month near the Tybee bridge, was moved this week to the Evans creek section. Two large crews of thinners are at work in the Medoc orchard, where the pear chop is being heavily thinned. Hay buyers from the south end of the valley were interviewing farmers here Wednesday as to prices on a large quantity of dairy alfalfa. The wetness of last week's rain and its ability to get through old roofs caused Frank Myers to put a new roof on his home, and if the present wetness continues for any length of time several more in this section will have to follow suit.

TALENT DISTRICT SURVEYS FINANCE

Landowners of the Talent irrigation district met Friday afternoon at the town hall at Talent, to hear informative information about the financial condition of the district. With general conditions, the landowners were told refinancing was the only relief. Interest due July 1 amounted to $33,000, with $3000 on hand to meet the payments. Next January a similar amount will be due. The same conditions prevail in the Medford district. The eight per cent delinquent tax passed by the last legislature, has increased the delinquent tax list, slightly complicating the situation. The Talent district is bonded for $1,089,000 with bondholders in all parts of the land.

Mad Pursuit BY JESSIE DOUGLAS FOX

SYNOPSIS: With a new spring's birth, Nora Lake's life becomes strangely familiar since the last. Within a year she has married Nicholas Thayer, been widowed by his suicide and come dangerously near elopement with his brother Jon, married to his step-sister. And now that Nora's estranged cousin, Halie, has finally obtained a newspaper job that will support her and her mother in the country, Nora sees her life with them drawing to a close. Not until then does she realize how they had anchored her soul to the realities of a life she had always craved but ever had been denied. Striding ahead, she sees a dreary spinsterhood. Hesitating young Dr. More, her feeling toward whom she can not analyze, plans to go ahead to study.

strength and steadiness, the light in his eyes, and the touch of his hands. Such mad ecstasy shook her that she felt herself waking from a dream. Fergus stood in the hall, his traveling bags at his feet, his soft hat in his hand as he said good-by to Aunt Em. "Wait! I'm coming with you! Wait!" she trembled. She flew up the stairs to her attic room. "Halie, I'm going away with Fergus. Oh, Halie, what shall I do?" Halie hobbled in; competent, smiling, she began to put Nora's clothes into a bag. "I'll pack the rest and send them on to you." "Oh, Halie, where's my coat, my hat?" Pete Baker pattered in, wriggling his fat little body when he saw Nora put on her hat. "Oh, Halie, can't I take him?" Halie smiled. "You'll 'ave your hands full with your violent young man without that beast along, indeed you cannot take him!" Her bag was clamped shut, she was laughing, trembling, and Halie stood watching her, her lips twisted in a smile. "I hope he'll make a respectable woman of you," Halie cried. Nora laughed exultantly.

"Wait, Fergus, I'm coming with you," Nora cried. "It was his voice speaking her name in a way he had never said it before; in a way that was of greater significance than anything that had ever happened to her. "You're coming with me. I haven't a thing to offer you. Poverty and struggle." "Do you think I would go straight into that life, knowing what it means?" "No, I didn't think you would." "Then why did you ask me?" "So that you'll never forget me. As I'll never forget you—no matter what happens to us—we'll remember." He caught her close and kissed her and she clung to him for a moment. Then he was gone. Aunt Em came in. She was carrying the old sign—Studio of Music—trying to find a barrel to put it in; she walked furtively about, as though she did not know what she was doing. Nora leaned there against the window. It was true she would never forget him. She would think of him when she woke in the morning, when she went to sleep at night. She would know he was living more richly and fully than she could ever live. She felt lost, and frightened; she who thought she would never be afraid again. She was losing the one thing in life she must have because she was willful and proud. A strange, trembling ecstasy shook her as the great tree was shaken outside the window. Something in her heart seemed to cry that the cold winter was broken. Poverty, struggle, that was all Fergus offered her. But looking back she saw that life in the red brick house had been rich because of that. Because poverty could not break their spirit nor dull their joy in living. And the security she had longed for was not a house, not a place, only a state of being. "Good-by, Aunt Em," she heard Fergus calling. Suddenly she was alive again. All the zest for the gypsy-like life she had lived with Julian had returned in full flood. It was Fergus who needed her just as she needed him from the first moment she had come to Aunt Em's, needed his

"Wait, Fergus, I'm coming with you," Nora cried. "Halie, he's never asked me to marry him! Ask him his intentions, won't you?" There was something strangely beautiful in the sudden gesture that Halie made toward Nora. "You're sure, Nora?" "Sure!" Nora cried. "I knew that when he did not scorn my poor Julian—when he stood beside him—that no one but Fergus could ever matter again." Nora and Halie went down the stairs the last time together. Fergus took her bag, stooped to kiss Aunt Em and to wring Halie's hand. Nora had her arms about them both, her eyes brilliant, her cheeks flushed. "Aunt Em, darling, you must think I'm mad!" "I think, Nora, it's the first sensible thing you've ever done," Aunt Em said. They watched them as they went down the brown stone steps. Nora turning her face to Fergus at something he said, laughing in answer. The taxi door slammed behind them. They could hear Nora's voice calling, "Good-by, darling, darling!" Aunt Em stood looking after them. "We'll miss her, Halie. But I think she'll be happy." "She'll have so much to make her unhappy that I know she'll be happy," Halie said. Aunt Em went into the back parlor, she sat rocking, her eyes far away on a little village tucked among the hills. She was watching her lover come through the meadow toward her. "Halie, you remember I said we would be rich in March?" But Halie was not listening; she too was far away. She was watching a small, gay, gypsy-like figure, dark hair tossed in the wind. Beside her was a tall gaunt man. They had come to the edge of the woods. Halie wanted to follow them, see life through their exultant eyes, but when she searched through the wood for them they were gone, swallowed up by the dense trees. CAMPFIRE PERMIT NECESSARY AFTER FIRST IN FORESTS

Campfire permits are now being required on the Mount Hood, Cascade, Deschutes, Santiam, Umatilla, Umpqua, and Fremont national forests in Oregon, and on the Columbia and Chelan in Washington, according to an announcement just received from the regional forester, Portland, Oregon. Campfire permits will be required on all national forests of Oregon and Washington after July 1, it is said. They are free, and may be obtained from any forest ranger. It is necessary to have these permits before building campfires on the national forests, except at improved and designated forest camps, according to the announcement. The regional forester points out that the national forests are free for public recreational use, and that there are only a few simple requirements for the protection of this public resource. In addition to campfire permits, a special order will require that, after July 1, there shall be no smoking, while traveling in the national forests, on forest brush or grassland, except on paved or surfaced highways. This order has been made necessary, it is said, by the continued carelessness of a minority of smokers, who are responsible for at least too many man caused forest fires.

NEED EQUALIZATION OF M. E. MINISTERS

EUGENE, Ore., June 27.—(AP)—A program of equalization of salaries of Methodist Episcopal ministers of Oregon was undertaken by the state conference of the church in business sessions here today. Consideration is necessary, it was said, because of urgent need among many poorly paid pastors. A meeting was to be held this afternoon of ministers who receive $1,800 and over, to discuss ways and means of aiding pastors who receive from $1,000 down to $400 annually from their parishes.
