IGARETTE PISTOL ANDIT SENTENCED TO 3-YEAR TERM

George A. Fifer, 20, an enlisted n of the U. S. navy, who con- ed he was the partner of Vic- C. Marcelle, aged 15, accord- to Nebraska records, was sen- ed to serve not less than three rs in state prison at Salem for part in the "cigarette gun" up of local service stations, a hamburger stand.

Marcelle's mother made an un- alling plea for the boy and de- ed it was his fir- mis-step d that "he had always been good boy."

The fact that Fifer and Mar- e used an imitation weapon gated in the sailor's favor, ugh it did not lessen the seri- ness of their offense.

Fifer told the court he would to return to his ship, and ndered what the navy would . The court rejoined, 'you ld have thought of that be- ' and declared the navy would a way to adjust conditions his absence. He was stationed the cruiser "Detroit," and was furlough to visit his mother n he started in banditry.

The sentence came as a shock Fifer who had confidently ex- ted parole as a first offender. Fifer and Marcelle started a ner "crime wave" here when committed three hold-ups in many nights, intimidating their tims with a perfect imitation Lüger revolver that fired nking but cigarettes. In their ctions they said they spent ir loot, amounting to $28 "for garettes and showing the girls good time."

After the hold-ups, they went local dances with three young ls and after one robbery staged midnight swimming party" on Applegate.

L. E. Thompson, a Cherokee In- n, who plead guilty to pass- checks on a local poolhall, s given a parole on three con- tions: That he reimburse the nty for the money expended returning him from Yakima, at he go to work and n to his home in Oklahoma.

Wiley Post— Globe Galloper

By Leon H. Durst.
(Copyright, 1931, by the Associated Press)

Part VII.

Wiley Post was happy when the way was smoothed for the opportunity to make real the "biggest thing he could think of —that bug to go around the world."

With assurance of the financial backing of F. C. Hall, his Oklahoma friend, and the spontaneous co-operation of his navigator, Harold Gatty, Post went to work in earnest shaping things for the argosy he had "dreamed of for over four years."

The big moment had arrived for the young man who, as a farmer boy, had expressed his aviation bent by whittling out airplane models.

To Post the task of getting his sleek monoplane, "Winnie Mae," in condition was the main objective. He himself, as usual, was riding the crest of health's wave. Nor did he feel misgivings about his ability to handle the plane as long as her motor soothingly sang.

It was primarily the job of the meticulous Gatty to fuss with maps, charts, logarithms and all those things a good navigator relishes.

To make perfect his plane, Wiley spent a month at the air factory on the Pacific coast where he once worked as chief test pilot. The 425 horsepowered, supercharged motor of his "Winnie Mae" was to be termed both his "mascot and good luck charm."

Upon its throbbing nine cylinders he lavished the mass of mechanical lore gleaned from his working on all sorts of engines. He even reached back to utilize that experience born of barnstorming days when he thrilled country crowds with his wing walking and parachute leaps, and gave the right click to erratic motors.

It was only a shell of the engine that carried him to victory in the 1930 national non-stop air derby from the Pacific coast to Chicago. Parts had been replaced only after they had been X-rayed, etched, and microscopically studied. "We spent as much money on it," Post said, "as a new engine would cost, but we wouldn't trade it for two new ones, I'm sure."

To gain more speed he worked out his own fuel carrying arrangement and altered the wing adjustment. The fuselage and five wing tanks served as gasoline receptacles. This moved the weight sufficiently to the front to permit what Post said would be easier handling, evener balance and better speed flying position.

A slight negative angle of incidence to the wings was made to "give more speed and at the same time balance the load better."

Fully loaded, the ship weighed about 6000 pounds with a range of 2400 miles on the 540 gallons of gas and 31 gallons of oil which she carried.

Spare parts assembled were valve springs, bearings for engine, rocker arms and spark plugs.

Post saw no need of carrying either parachute or life raft. The food was limited to just a "few bites." Wiley sized up the situation this way:

"If we come down in the ocean —well, it'll be all over. Food won't do us any good."

Compasses for pilot and navigator were packed, as well as other convention instruments. There was also an "artificial horizon" and a "directional gyro" to aid in fog and other blind flying. Above the place for Navigator Gatty in the back, a glass fitted hatch was cut in the wing to let in light.

Satisfied the plane was in the pink of perfection, Post and Gatty headed for Roosevelt field after about a day's sojourn in Washington.

Wiley went to the capital seeking permission to fly over Russia. This had been granted, however, while they were en route. Wiley jokingly said, upon hearing this information, there was not much for them to do "but to let President Hoover have a chance to look over a couple of ambitious men."

They did talk, however, with Secretary Stimson of the state department, and proudly posed for pictures with the ranking cabinet officer.

To capital reporters Post said they were "going to fly around the world in 10 days, and maybe less." Post said plans showed 107 hours of flying time would be required. This was prophetic, the actual flying time being only a few hours less.

They figured the ship would have an average cruising speed of 150 miles an hour. It did.

Wiley and his partner loitered at Roosevelt field several weeks, waiting for Dr. James Kimball of the U. S. weather bureau, to say all was well. Mechanics marveled at the mechanism of the "Winnie Mae." Every now and then Wiley, dubbed at the field the most "unworried man that ever flew across the Atlantic," gave his plane a casual look over, always leaving with a satisfied expression.

Then came the big moment, the dawn of June 3. To Harbor Grace, N. F., they streaked. Mid-afternoon found Wiley Post Berlin-bound over the Atlantic, real action in tempo with a long-cherished dream.

(Tomorrow: Wiley Post carves his niche high in aviation's shining hall of fame).

CLYDE STEVENS FUNERAL FRIDAY

Funeral services for Clyde Oliver Stevens, eight-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Claude Stevens of Lincoln street, who passed away Wednesday after a brief illness due to tetanus caused from a splinter in the foot, will be conducted by Rev. A. G. Bennett at the Conger chapel at 2:00 p.m., Friday. Interment will be in Jacksonville cemetery.

Little Clyde was born in Medford and attended the Jackson school. He leaves, besides his parents, one sister, Maudie Stevens and a host of friends of the family who extend their sincere sympathy in this sad hour of bereavement.

PORTER ORCHESTRA TO PLAY IN LITHIA PARK

Ike Porter and his newly formed orchestra will play at the dance in Lithia park in Ashland Saturday night, which will open the summer season of dancing at the open air pavilion. Porter, who has played with a number of dance bands and orchestras on the coast, is well known in Medford, and many southern Oregon dance fans are glad to hear of his return to the valley.

DEPRESSION MYTH TO RELIEF HURLER; OFTEN WINS $250

Chad Kimsey, the St. Louis Browns' elephantine pitcher, has heard a lot about the depression, but he can't find it. The money market, in fact, has been decidedly easy with Chad recently.

Under the Browns' 1931 rules, a pitcher who either saves a game already won or wins one which is tied up, collects $250 for his efforts.

Kimsey is "reliever-in-chief" of the Browns' curving corps, and is finding no fault whatever to the role, sometimes regarded as a rather lowly one for a pitcher.

Big Chad recently won late-inning games from the Yankees and Athletics on successive days and collected $500 of P. De C. Ball's cash.

"Business," said Kimsey as he pocketed the money, "is decidedly on the upward trend and prosperity is just around the corner."

Pipgras Finally Wins

NEW YORK—(AP)—When George Pipgras, big righthander of the New York Yankees, turned in a victory in the latter stages of the June campaign against the Cleveland Indians, it marked his first of the season. Pipgras, who got off to a late start due to an appendicities operation during the winter, had failed in every attempt since May 1.
