ENGLISH FARMERS BALK COLLECTION OF CHURCH TAXES
SUBSURFACE HEAT WARMS POOL FOR ICELAND BATHERS

STOKE-BY-CLARE, Suffolk, England—(AP)—English farmers are giving church authorities no little worry over prospects for continuation of the tithe.

"It is a serious moment for the church," said Sir Stanford Downing, secretary of the Ecclesiastical commission.

"The tithe demand is equivalent to 1.25 shillings on every sack of wheat," countered A. E. Mobbs, chairman of the Suffolk Tithe-Payers' association.

"The situation was brought to a head here when a farmer's possessions were auctioned to satisfy $500 arrears in tithes.

The farmer's neighbors bid 5 cents, 10 cents and other low prices for hogs, cows and farm machinery. When the sale was over the tithe commissioner had only $25.

The farmer's friends then made him a present of the things they had purchased.

Opponents of the tithes say more than 600 Suffolk landowners have joined their organization and that 1000 Norfolk farmers are organizing, as well as smaller numbers in Essex and Cambridgeshire.

Because of religious convictions, however, most British farmers feel the tithe is a fair charge. Those not opposed to tithes say landowners purchase land in full knowledge that tithes are expected. Repudiation, they say, would work great hardship on country clergymen of the Church of England.

SACRAMENTO, Cal., July 11—(AP)—Jacob B. Reine, who pleaded guilty in United States district court here today to stealing a $15,000 government check from a postoffice box in Klamath Falls, Ore., was sentenced to three years in prison by federal Judge Frank Kerrigan.

REYKJAVIK, Iceland—(AP)—Year-round bathing in comfortably warm water, either salt or fresh is now possible in this land of the chilly name.

The sea bathing may be had at a spot where the Atlantic washes through a lava ridge filter, so hot that a lagoon of warm water forms behind it.

The fresh water swimming is in a pool just opened here, the water being piped from nearby hot springs. It comes in at about ten degrees below boiling.

The hot springs are used also to heat some of the city's homes and the pipes lead to a laundry, school, hospital and other public buildings.

The country is volcanic and it has been noticed that the location of the hot springs points to a connection with cliffs in the earth.

LEGHORN, Italy—(AP)—Governments are making huge fortunes out of a superfluity of special stamps issued all at the expense of the poor stamp collector, the European Philatelic congress decided when it met here.

The congress decided to ask various governments to cut down on commemorative issues, stamps for special flights, and the like.

General Italo Balbo, Italian air minister, revealed that the total cost of his squadron flight to Brazil in January—$150,000—had been covered by the sale of special air stamps, and a nest egg had been left over for another flight.

PORTLAND, Ore., July 11—(AP)—The testament of Thomas Henry Edwards, pioneer fur trader dealer here, who died at San Diego in 1929 leaving an estate of $500,000 in Multnomah county, was upheld in circuit court here today. KLAMATH FALLS, Ore., July 11—(AP)—A forest fire covering 100 acres was burning today in the Keno Springs district 45 miles east of here and was said to be threatening some of the finest stands of timber in the country.

Thirty men with tractors and other equipment were battling the flames.

PORT DEPOSIT, Md., July 11—(AP)—Former Senator Joseph R. Kanter's independent campaign for the Republican nomination for president gets under way this afternoon at his model dairy farm near here.

EACH GENERATION BRINGS NEW WAR SAYS COL. MILLER

"The only indications of a war today are found in just plain human nature. And the next conflict will probably be with some distant nation least suspected today," Lieut. Colonel Wm. C. Miller of Charleston, S. C., who arrived in Medford this morning to visit his ranch in the Table Rock district, stated when urged to voice his opinion of the often prophesied "approaching combat."

"You see the averages are against us. Each generation has its war," Colonel Miller explained. "There undoubtedly will be another one. Today, there are no rumblings which would indicate the future opponents. A few years before we entered the World war, who would have forecast trouble with Germany?"

Colonel Miller, who is accompanied by Mrs. Miller, is en route to Chilkoot Baracks, the only army station in Alaska. He will be in command there, and after spending five years as professor of military science and tactics at The Citadel, military college at Charleston, he says he is anxious to be with the troops again.

Colonel Miller is a southerner of the old school, descendant of the Gaillard family, member of the French Huguenot settlement which established one of the most aristocratic and best known southern aristocracies. His wife is a Yankee of equally well known heritage. But there is perfect harmony in the Miller family, although Mrs. Miller explained this morning, most of the South Carolinians are in spirit still fighting the Civil war.

"Much of the romance has gone since the Civil war period, but South Carolina is still a grand old state," Mrs. Miller declared, with as much pride in her voice as one could expect from a true daughter of the southern "it was a perfect life those people led, but of course it couldn't endure," she said, referring to plantation days, then drew a beautiful word picture of the few remaining plantation houses and the little cabins, formerly inhabited by the negroes, which still lend enchantment to the state of South Carolina, the first to secede from the union.

Colonel Miller holds a prominent place in international military circles and has received many decorations. But the one most interesting to him, according to Mrs. Miller, is the decoration of the Order of the Rising Sun, received during his war service in Siberia, where he was stationed following the entrance of the United States in the World war. The emblem resembles a breastplate and hangs from the neck. Colonel Miller also served on the Mexican border and in the Philippines.

The Millers made the trip west from New York via the Panama canal, and will continue north to Seattle this evening, from which city they will sail for Alaska. They noticed the very dry conditions in most states, while traveling inland. South Carolina, however, they explained, has had sufficient rainfall this year and will realize a good cotton crop. "When the cotton crop falls here," Mrs. Miller added, "everything stops, the students leave school."

John L. Nealon, who operates the Shasta this morning and motivated them to Table Rock, where they spent the afternoon.
