100 MILES UP ROCKET PLANE INVENTORS AIM

Latest Combines Turbine and Propellor With Rocket in Experiments On Test Motor.

WELL, N. M.—(UP)—New tests in rockets and airplane to enable the study of the sphere are being made here by Robert H. Goddard, professor of physics at Clark University, Worcester, Mass.

the last year he has been experimenting here. He selected it because of atmospheric conditions and the absence of obstructions. He is working under the direction of the Guggenheim Foundation.

High Speed Needed. A new type of airplane motor will enable airplanes to travel through the atmosphere and at higher altitudes than ever has been attained. It was developed by Dr. Goddard.

that has been estimated that 400 miles an hour, rocket propulsion for airplanes will be effective than any other and it is on this theory that he built and patented this motor.

though the rocket jets themselves have more efficiency than the Diesel engine or the turbine, this efficiency can be utilized at lower, or present speeds, because a large part of the energy passes off in the form of heat and comparatively little is left to the plane. The present motor, involving the use of a turbine and propeller, in addition to the jet, overcomes the disadvantage which exists under 600 miles an hour.

Goddard's rockets will carry instruments, barometers, etc., to collect samples of upper atmosphere and other specially designed apparatus to gather information from the stratosphere.

led by a newly developed fuel, Dr. Goddard hopes to send the rockets 250 miles into the sky.

ounty engineer and master in each county performed by the same Attorney-General L. H. Van Stricklin, state engineer.

asked if the combined office could be created without violation of state law. Winkler's opinion stated that the legislature and the supreme court have declared the position of the county engineer, his duties, a mere contract of employment at the option of the court, and may be repealed. The two duties could be combined under the head of water.
