FISH SHOCKED BY SHORTED CIRCUIT AT DAM, IS IDEA

A letter mailed to the state fish commission, which obviously inspired the front page story in this morning's Oregonian, maintaining that thousands of chinook salmon and steelhead trout have been killed by the "shorted circuit" at Gold Ray dam was released this morning by the local office of the California Oregon Power company with the letter received from M. T. Hoy, master fish warden, requesting data regarding the situation.

While 141 short circuits have been found in the Gold Ray plant during the past four years, in accordance with the Oregonian story, there have been only three in which questions of fish disturbance arose, according to the power company.

Quotations carried in the Oregonian from the company report are correct but frequently incomplete, leaving much room for deductions.

"Outdoor construction at Gold Ray is the usual type for hydro-electric plants of this size and size and conforms to requirements of the state public service commission. All equipment is well grounded, and a test of the ground resistance has recently been made. For an average of two readings measurement gave 4 ohms, which we consider to be a low value," the power company report reads. The letter ends with assuring the fish commission that the company is very "interested in the fish situation at Gold Ray."

It is believed, the fish commissioner reports, according to a dispatch from Portland, that the short circuits, losing 65,000 volts of electricity at a time, killed thousands of fish. Master Fish Warden Hoy asked the power company for a report in response to several incidents reported by observers. Witnesses had reported seeing countless fish leap from the electrically charged water, turn over on their backs and float down stream.

The California Oregon Power company report, which lists the causes and time of each line interruption for the past four years, is being considered today by the state fish commission.

LEGION DRUM CORPS PARADES TOMORROW

The popular Medford Legion drum corps will stage a special parade through the business district tomorrow night at 7:30 p. m. to advertise the Legion "Midnite Frolic" at the Craterian next Saturday. They will be headed by Lloyd Williamson, Medford's high-stepping drum major, who scored a bit with the local Elks band at the national B. P. O. E. convention in Seattle early this month. Williamson's picture accompanied by complimentary write-ups appeared in the leading Seattle papers during the convention.

Frederic permanent waves, spiral wavy, $10; Croquignole, $7.50. Emma Cline Shop, Tel. 454.

TICKETS ON SALE FOR VETS' FROLIC

Tickets are now on sale for the big American Legion "Midnite Frolic" to take place at the Craterian theatre Saturday night, July 25th. This is the first time an attraction of this kind has been put on at popular prices and indications point to a record attendance from all parts of the valley.

Local people are urged to secure their tickets early as there will be no reserved seats and the seat sale will have to be limited to the capacity of the Craterian. The "big show" is being put on as a benefit to send the Medford Legion drum corps to represent southern Oregon at the state convention in Corvallis, Aug. 6, 7 and 8.

Everyone is cooperating to make this frolic a big success and the Craterian theatre is being donated for the occasion by Arch Holt, manager.

It is hoped that the proceeds of the evening will prove sufficient to send the Medford drum corps to the Corvallis convention, they will represent the state drum corps thereby gaining much publicity for southern Oregon.
