EXIT by Harold Bell Wright

SYNOPSIS: Roy Donovan tells Pierre's attempt to bring him to justice for killing Bruce in the desert. Meanwhile Ann, Bruce's wife, and Tony, seeking her husband and Pierre, are detained by the Red Butte sheriff in connection with the fatal bank robbery. Donovan, brought in by deputies, admits killing Bruce in self-defense after hearing him confess to the murder. Then Pierre staggers in and, in a scene of Donovan's story, confesses to the bank killing so as to clear Ann's father. For her benefit he pictures Bruce as a hero who had sacrificed his life for him. True to his actress-mother's conviction that the player's "exit" is most vital to his role, Pierre dies with his heroic posture, ending the play. Tony had been reading to Ann.

Chapter 39 INTO ANOTHER WORLD

It was very quiet in the living room of the Carey home when Antonio Latour finished reading the play he had written for his beloved Pierre. Ann's ironing was forgotten and Ann, seated by the window, was crying. Old Tony, himself deeply moved, thoughtfully closed his precious manuscript and, clasping it to his breast, looked at Ann. A sad, understanding smile crept like a beautiful glow over the old actor's face.

"There, there, Ann," he said, "how foolish we are. It is only a play."

"It seemed to me, when you were reading it, that it was all true."

"No, Father Tony."

"Because a great soul sacrifices itself in secret, is that sacrifice less real because the world does not witness it?"

"No, Father Tony."

"Because a great love must ever remain unknown even by those who live most intimately with the lovers, is that love less real?"

"No, no, Father Tony."

"That all depends upon the actors. There is nothing more melodramatic than this play which we call 'Exit' when played by melodramatic actors."

The sound of an automobile in front of the house came through the window. Ann looked out.

"It is Pierre," she cried joyously. The old actor and the girl listened with smiling faces as Pierre shouted from the door: "Thanks for the ride, fellows. Good-by. Look me up if you come to New York—you know, The American Academy of Dramatic Art."

"Good-by, nothing!" came another voice. "We're coming back to take you to your train."

"Good boys!" shouted Pierre. "So long!" The automobile moved on.

With a shout, "Hello, folks!" Pierre bounded into the living room. His arms were piled with bundles; his face beamed with joyous eager excitement. Still holding his bundles, he danced over to Ann.

"How's my sweet Lady Ann?" He pretended he was about to kiss her and with a laugh at her embarrassment whirled on to Tony.

"Thought I'd find you here, Father Tony. How's the old boy?"

"Good!" he shouted. "I've got to rush—train leaves at 5:53. Been talking everybody good-by. Bruce home yet? Where's Martin? Excuse me, folks, I've got to finish packing." He rushed upstairs.

Ann ran into the hall and looked up wistfully.

"Can I help you, Pierre?" and she could not hide the eager longing in her voice.

CHEST DIRECTOR INFORMS HOOVER RELIEF IN HAND

WASHINGTON, Aug. 13. — (AP) — President Hoover today was advised by Allen T. Burns, executive director of the Association of Community Chests, that his organizations in 27 cities had reported "complete confidence" that they would be "able wholly to undertake the unemployment relief situation during the forthcoming winter."

President Hoover discussed the business situation today with Walter S. Gifford, president of the American Telephone and Telegraph company.

Their talk was over the breakfast table. No information was forthcoming from the president's aides as to the details of the conference. Mr. Gifford's visit was his second to the White House within a week.

The phase of the unemployment situation that is causing President Hoover more concern than any other is that which comes under the label of "permanent."

The business depression has demonstrated to industry that many employees and types of activities heretofore considered absolutely necessary can be eliminated without impairment of efficiency. In some cases, the reduction of overhead and labor expense has increased efficiency.

WHEAT BEING FED IN PLACE OF CORN

WASHINGTON, Aug. 13. — (AP) — With wheat prices dragging on the market's lowest level, farmers are finding it an economic convenience to use it as a livestock and poultry feed in the place of the more costly and mixed rations.

The agriculture department and farm board have no estimates of the amount of wheat which will be fed this year, but it probably will exceed the estimate of 182,000,000 bushels made last year.

Federal agencies have advised feeding as a means of absorbing a part of the 1931 bumper crop surplus, which is adding to the already large supply in existence. Farmers, in accepting this advice, are guided by relative prices of wheat and corn. Now corn brings a higher market price than wheat.
