

BELOVED PIONEER FETED BY MANY; SHE IS 95 TODAY

Mrs. D. J. "Grandma" Lumsden is 95 today. And from the vine-covered home on South Holly, where she lives with her daughter-in-law, Mrs. H. U. Lumsden, she greets the world with the enthusiasm and faith which have brought her an increase of friends with each year.

Showers with flowers and other birthday remembrances, the beloved little pioneer smiles at the date on the calendar and her rapidly approaching centennial. Her blue eyes which have watched men return from several wars, guided knitting needles and spinning wheel and lowered before the sharp gaze of the Minnesota Indian, welcome callers from all sections of the valley.

"They are not dimmed by glasses and the teeth which her smile reveals and her own.

Seated in a large chair before her window yesterday with an open book resting in her slender hands, she reviewed for early callers a few of the experiences 95 years have brought.

"I think people are about the same today as they used to be," she remarked, refusing to condemn the younger generation. "I like to read. I enjoy books more than anything. This one is a birthday present from my sister. I don't like silly books, but I find there are plenty of good ones written."

Questioned as to her opinion of motion pictures, she answered: "I like the movies. But I can't hear well since my illness of last winter, so I don't go to talkies anymore. I could hear all right until I was ill."

"I have never driven a car. You see they weren't stylish when I was young, but I love to go driving. I've no desire to ride in an airplane, though. If I have to fall I'd rather fall from an auto.

"Oh, yes, I used to ride horses. I lived on a farm until I was married in '58. I used to go out in the pasture, catch my horse, bridle and saddle her and I would go over the countryside," a new twinkle entered her eyes as she laid her book on the window sill.

"I've lived in many states, in city and country, and I believe I like city life the best. Of course, there's lots of fun on the farm, too."

Turning to talk of fashions, when hoop skirts were the mode, Grandma paused to go upstairs and bring down some photographs. She took the steps with the utmost ease and returned soon with a daguerreotype.

The picture showed a girl with beautiful hair, attired in a velvet gown, enhanced with full sleeves and quaint basque waist.

"It was my wedding dress," she explained, "wine colored velvet."

"No review of a sturdy, simple life was given by Grandma as explanation of her good health. "My husband, my children, most of my brothers and sisters have crossed the great divide," she said. "I was the oldest of 12 children, born near Dayton, Ohio, in '36. I married D. J. Lumsden of Syracuse, N. Y., in '58. We had four children. They have all gone. My daughter, Carrie, and son, H. U. Lumsden were well known here. My father died when he was 70, my mother when she was 84.

"I have just a sister and two brothers left. My sister in Los Angeles is 20 years younger than I am."

Mrs. Lumsden traveled to Minnesota with her husband behind a team of oxen in 1871. Her husband, and two brother-in-laws fought in the Union army during the Civil war. Her husband also fought in the Indian war and she knitted socks for her grandson, Treve Lumsden of this city, when he went to France.

She has lived in Medford for 40 years. "I came here when the place was just a mud, mud," she explained yesterday. "I came west when the golden spike was laid, crossing the mountains by stage.

"I have seen Indians, friendly and unfriendly, and I was scared to death of them when I glimpsed their shadows from under my sun-bonnet in Minnesota."

Mrs. Lumsden has known many sorrows, endured many hardships as the years went by, talking with them relatives and friends, but she has always continued to make new ones.

Her visits with her nephew, C. I. Hutchinson of the Hutchinson and Lumsden store and members of his staff, are anticipated by many residents of the valley who chance to meet her there. She hasn't stopped at the store for a chat since last January, but hopes to soon again.

Each day she extends a jolly greeting to her two great grandchildren, Ann Lee and Treve Lumsden, Jr., and their little friends, who call at her home.

Misses Green Guests Here Enroute North

The Misses Ruth and Frances Green left this city yesterday morning for Portland after a short visit with friends in the valley, having stopped enroute north from southern California, where they enjoyed an extensive vacation trip. They formerly made their home in Ashland and have many friends in southern Oregon.

Miss Ruth will return to Berkeley, Calif., where she now lives, the last of the week after a short stay with her sister in the northern city.

Mrs. Pickel Honored With Birthday Dinner

Complimenting Mrs. E. B. Pickel on her birthday anniversary a group of intimate friends were invited to dinner at which Dr. Pickel was host at the Hotel Medford last evening.

Covers were placed for 11 at the surprise event and dinner was followed by a pleasant time at the Pickel home.

Will Be Home From Vacation Sunday

Miss Margaret Henaley, who has been the guest of relatives and friends in Portland, Seattle and Vancouver, B. C., for the past two weeks, will return to Medford Sunday. She is now visiting with her uncle and aunt, Mr. and Mrs. W. R. Jephcott.

Mr. and Mrs. Holmes Are Guests Here

Mr. and Mrs. Robert Holmes and little daughter, Marian, of Seattle are guests in this city of Mrs. Holmes' parents, Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Strang. They will also visit Mr. Holmes' mother at Central Point and other relatives in the valley before returning north.

Miss Lindquist Leaves for Home

Miss Charlotte Lindquist left last evening for Salem after spending several days in this city as guest of Mr. and Mrs. Harold Larsen.

Guardian Group Efforts Hit by Commissioner

PORTLAND, Ore., Aug. 27.—(AP)—James W. Mott, Oregon corporation commissioner, in a public statement announced that his office has no connection with a group of persons calling themselves "Stockholders and Depositors' Protective and Restorative Committee of the Guardian Building and Loan Association."

Mott said he learned a group of people maintaining offices in Portland had been soliciting money from depositors and stockholders of the Guardian Building & Loan association, the Western Building and Loan association, and the Dime and Dollar Building and Loan association. The money ascertained was to be used to reorganize the companies in order to recoup losses.

The Guardian group of building and loan associations recently was taken over by the corporation commissioner.

"In my opinion," said Mott's statement, "any contributions made to this committee would be simply a waste of good money. Such a committee could do nothing that the corporation commissioner is not already empowered by law to do, and, furthermore, it could do nothing that the corporation commissioner is not, in fact already doing."

SUNDOWN STORIES

BOBBING AROUND

By Mary Graham Bonner.

Now the man running the boat had John and Peggy and the little Black Clock set up at one end of the boat and together with some very heavy weights he used, try to push the boat under water.

They would no sooner succeed in pushing it down so that it seemed they would be right under the water when up they bobbed again, and the holes that they had noticed were letting the water pour out through them.

At first the children were afraid that this boat would not prove to be so unsinkable as the captain and the Little Black Clock said it was.

They were not nervous, for they had not gone out very far from the land, and they could all swim, and then, too, they knew that the Little Black Clock would not let any harm come to them.

But this boat actually would not sink. And it seemed so strange to John and Peggy that holes in a boat could be made so that the water would not come in through them enough to sink the boat, but instead would pour out all the water.

"They've been trying these boats for some time," said the Little Black Clock, "but this is among one of the first that has been perfected, so I thought it would be a good idea if we were among the first to take a ride in it."

Peggy had spoken of it as the waterproof boat because it was like her waterproof which kept her dry on the rainiest of days.

"You certainly keep up ahead of the times, Little Black Clock," John said, as they were on their way home, and the Little Black Clock merely grinned and said:

"I enjoyed it too!"

Tomorrow—"Moon Rainbow."

Central Point Man Weds in Klamath

Marshall M. Day, who in taking out the wedding license, described himself as 88 years old and farmer of Central Point, became a bridegroom last Monday night in Klamath Falls, his bride being Betty Kinney, 30, who has been employed in the Blue Bird confectionery of that city.

The marriage took place at midnight and the ceremony was performed by W. B. Barnes, justice of the peace, according to Klamath Falls newspapers.

SAVE LUMBER YARD FROM ASHLAND FIRE

Fire in the McCurry property on Oak street in Ashland, adjoining the Ashland Lumber Company yards, this morning threatened the lumber yards for a time. How from the lumber yard, and quick work by the Ashland fire department quenched the blaze before it spread. Damage was placed at $50. The fire was caused by small boys playing with an electric plate, and leaving inflammable material on top of it.

COARSE FOODS Cannot Cure CONSTIPATION

Many people suffering from intestinal stasis—delayed bowel passage, without the use of laxatives and cathartics. So they consume large quantities of coarse, bulky food. They believe this is "a natural method" of stimulating bowel action.

Taken in excessive quantity, coarse foods are as harmful as the daily pill or physic!

They destroy the normal functioning of the bowel, set up a cathartical condition in the intestines, irritate the tender mucous membrane and cause colitis—inflammation of the bowel. Bulky foods throw an abnormal burden upon the organs of elimination, often distending the colon and thus directly inducing ptosis—a falling of the bowel.

Chronic constipation can only be cured by getting at the cause which lies in the colon, itself. It leads to a score of ailments of a serious nature. It should not be neglected. Consult a specialist in rectal and colon ailments to secure permanent relief.

Dr. Phillips, one of the nation's foremost specialists in ambulatory proctology—the non-surgical, painless and non-confining treatment of rectal and colonic disorders—can correct the condition which causes constipation! Consult him free of charge!

LEA'S HAIR TONIC BANISHED TROUBLE

"This wonderful New Hair Tonic has helped the condition of our hair and scalp and made us both appear so much younger, both my husband and I use and recommend it among friends all the time," writes Mrs. H. C. Amos, 227 E. 20th Street, Owensboro, Kentucky.

"My scalp was itchy and full of dandruff all the time. I didn't know what to do until finally a friend advised using Lea's Hair Tonic and their Vasco Powder Shampoo, which I did.

"My scalp itching, the dandruff is all gone. My gray hairs have vanished and my hair is so glossy and pretty I could never do without Lea's again. My husband uses Lea's too and we sincerely recommend it to everyone with scalp or gray hair troubles," continues Mrs. Amos, who like thousands of other women, have tried Lea's and found it pleasant and easy to use, wonderfully effective and not at all like the oldtime dyes and stains. Talks To Parents

GROWN-UP TALK

By Alice Judson Peate.

Probably no one element in the child's environment influences his values as much as the conversation of the grown-ups in the house.

The family dinner table educates him for better or for worse much more than does the classroom.

If grown-ups talk much of sickness, money worries, if the newspaper items that cause comment are chiefly those concerned with crime, these things will take a large place in the child's developing conception of the world in which he lives.

These will be the things that will interest him; the things that he considers important and will want to know more about.

Certainly awareness of the unpleasant aspects of life should have its place in the child's development, for eventually he must take his place in the real and not in the ideal world.

But he should acquire a balanced outlook, and this he can't have if things vulgar, commonplace, ugly and unhappy bulk too large in the body of his knowledge.

Since the world is full of a number of things, a great many of which are highly interesting, delightful and thought-provoking, it is the business of the child's home to make him aware of them.

Periodicals and magazines, several of which come regularly to the typical American home, should represent a variety of interests, with due consideration for the tastes of the different members of the family.

The books that find their way into the family living room, through the discussions they provoke, make a definite contribution to the taste of growing children.

Grown-ups owe it to their children as well as to themselves, to be interested in and to talk about happy, worthwhile things.

AVOID ACID GASOLINE

It corrodes the needle valve in the carburetor, corrodes and gums motor valves, attacks bearings, pistons, cylinders and crankcase—eats metal wherever it contacts it.

You see the evidence in increasing gasoline consumption, gradual loss of motor pep, reduced power, and repair and upkeep costs, a good part of which are directly traceable to the effects of acid-gasoline.

Bear in mind, acids are not put into gasoline—they are there originally and their complete removal is one of the most perplexing problems of refining.
