LINDBERGHS HEAR SKILL LAUDED AT JAPANESE DINNER

Colonel Wields Chop Sticks at Shoeless Function — Wife's Aid On Trip Is Praised by Jap Prince

By James P. Howe.

TOKYO, Aug. 29.—(AP)—Speeches came first and soup last at a dinner in honor of Colonel and Mrs. Charles A. Linbergh, given tonight by the America Japan society at which Prince Iyesato Tokugawa presided.

Colonel Lindbergh spoke briefly and appeared relieved when his address was over. The colonel was ready with a set of chopsticks when the first course was brought in by a bevy of waitresses clothed in vari-colored kimonos.

All the 200 diners removed their shoes at the entrance of the dining room. The guests sat upon cushions placed on the floor. In front of them were standing trays.

Dishes Enjoyed.

The Lindberghs seemed to enjoy the raw fish and other delicacies. Colonel and Mrs. Lindbergh were first introduced to raw fish at Nemuro, before reaching Tokyo, and developed a pronounced liking for it.

Following the Japanese custom of having the speaking over with first, Prince Tokugawa paid tribute to Lindbergh's achievement of flying from New York to Paris in 1927, "winning not only the hearts of his own countrymen but of the entire world."

The prince then congratulated both Colonel and Mrs. Lindbergh upon their "great service in opening a North Pacific air route between the United States and Japan."

Praise for Anne.

Bowing to Mrs. Lindbergh, he continued:

"We assuredly have been filled with admiration for the wonderful technical attainments of Mrs. Lindbergh in accompanying and assisting her husband on this long journey. The noble qualities of young womanhood she displayed cannot fail to make a deep impression upon our people and to exert a lasting influence."

WILLOW SPRINGS TAME DEER SHOT BY BOY HUNTERS

Game Warden Roy Parr today was investigating a report from the Willow Springs section, that boys had killed a fawn, one of a group of tame deer turned loose by their keeper for better grazing. A man by the name of Enders cared for the deer, all young, and allowed them to pasture on his place. Recently he had been turning them loose during the daytime, and the herd would return at night.

Yesterday the fawn was found dead in the brush, and two boys with rifles were placed under suspicion.

The rest of the deer were paralyzed with fear, and their bleating could be heard from the roadside. They were finally rounded up in the Enders pasture again.

According to County Judge Sparrow, the "deer are as tame as heifers, and it is no trick to shoot them."

It is still three weeks until the deer season opens, but according to the authorities, premature hunters are already in the field with their rifles, especially youths, who are liable to shoot anything once.

PEAK OF HOT SPELL REACHED ON FRIDAY

Although this morning had the high minimum of 57 degrees, presaging another hot day, indications were that the present heat spell had reached its climax yesterday with a maximum of 102, as the sky was partly cloudy most of today and the weather bureau forecast issued this morning was for cooler weather tonight and Sunday.

The mercury had been steadily climbing all this week until the maximum of 102 was reached yesterday afternoon. This was not the record for the year, as on July 19 last the greatest heat of the summer so far was a maximum of 105 degrees.

FAIR TO SHOW WORK OF SCHOOL AND CLUB

Preliminary plans for the holding of a school exhibit and boys' and girls' club display at the fairgrounds this year, instead of the regular county fair, are now under way. It is planned to hold the exhibition September 18 and 19, under the general direction and supervision of County Agent R. G. Fowler.

There is available $1000 levied by the state, for the county fair fund, and a request has been filed with the county court that this be employed. It is not expected that all the amount will be used, chiefly for prizes.

MOON of DELIGHT
by Margaret Bell Houston

SYNOPSIS: The veil Juanita Basara wears as cigarette girl in Divitt's gambling house suggests a mystery which Divitt and Molly, his wife, have not penetrated. But Eric Ledbetter tries to tear off her disguise, enraging Gabreau, previously her protector against Umberto. Divitt steals a necklace from Mrs. Belaise, a patron, and later sends Juanita to return it. As Señorita Flores she delights Mrs. Belaise by bringing back the necklace, found, she explains, in the street. Though she refuses the reward she accepts the ring—his late mother's—which Mrs. Belaise's grandson, Kirk Stanard, brings to her hotel. Divitt employs a former associate, the Marquesa Cabrera, to chaperone Juanita, while aiding in his plans to rob the homes that Juanita will visit.

Chapter 14

A KISS IN THE DARK

CARLOTA stretched out a foot to show Divitt a run in her stocking. "I have no clothes, Spike."

"But you won't need clothes—certainly not for this—if you can't remember my name," Divitt informed her. "I shan't be around, of course, but you and Señorita Flores will be stopped at the Tijon, and I won't want you hollering 'Spike' at me every time you pass through the lobby."

"Forgive, Mister Divitt. It won't happen again."

"Get clothes," said Divitt. "I'll pay for them. I don't want Molly to know anything about you except that I've engaged an aristocratic duenna for Juanita. . . . Keep your room in Michel street. It may be useful.

"I'll pay you well, according to what you are worth to me. You known I keep my word."

"I keep my word. I do not double-cross you when I skin up the fire escape with the money. I lose you."

Divitt smiled. "You brought the money here to the roulette wheel. I don't say you double-crossed me. I wouldn't advise you to. One of the things I know about you is that you can't drink, or no job."

"A little wine—"

"A little wine makes a babbling goat of you. Do you give me your word? Where's your little gold cross?"

The marquesa hesitated, dived into her bosom, drew out the cross.

Divitt pointed to it. "Swear!"

The marquesa held the cross between her palms. "I swear," she said.

Juanita dressed that night with hands that trembled slightly. Kirk had stayed past his time. Juanita felt that he expected to meet some one else, some member of her family, perhaps—desiring some more definite bond than the necklace. He had left finally, with her half promise to go with him to the Comus ball! Would Divitt allow that?

Juanita tucked Mrs. Belaise's ring in a drawer. Tomorrow she would put it on a cord about her neck. It was beautiful, but it was its touch she loved, like the touch of a friend.

Kirk Stanard would not be in the parlors tonight. He was driving Mrs. Belaise and Lorena to their place in Biloxi. "It's as much to get away from the house next door as to give her the sea air," he had explained. Then supposing Juanita would not understand, had added, "Divitt's Parlors. It's no place for Nelly except in mild doses. . . . You, Señorita, would you like to visit the place?"

Juanita had thought not, adding, "You do not play yourself?" Now she would learn why he stood so passively beside the roulette wheel.

He shook his head. "Not roulette," he answered. "Not after the cotton market all day. That's where I'll take you—to the stock exchange! That's the proper place for a girl brought up on bull fights."

She was glad that Kirk would not be there tonight. Soon there might be, as Molly had indicated, a piquancy in offering cigarettes to him, knowing that he did not know (Not to Mrs. Belaise—it would always be difficult with her—but to him.) Something was quickening in her—some bright essential spring that had been choked for days. Tomorrow night, even, she hoped that Kirk would come.

Eric Ledbetter was the first person she saw as she entered the parlors. He sat with a gayly dressed crowd at one of the card tables, a crowd somewhat the worse for gin. Apparently they had just come from some Mardi Gras festivity, for all but one wore bright paper caps.

The one without the carnival spirit sat at Ledbetter's right, a girl with sleepy eyes and a red wind-blown bob, her cigarette hanging from the corner of her mouth, as she rested chin upon hand. Adrian Fouché was not among them, nor did Juanita see Divitt in his place. Gabreau was acting as croupier, and Molly sat in the cashier's cage.

Juanita struck his face with her fists.

Juanita had made the circuit of the room when Ledbetter spied her and rose, calling in unintelligible jargon. Juanita glanced at Molly, who met her eye without response. Gabreau, behind the roulette wheel, not so far from Ledbetter's table, was watching.

Juanita moved among the tables. There were not many in the parlors. Mardi Gras was devouring everything. . . . Juanita thought of Kirk, riding along the sea-girt road to Biloxi. She had been glad that he would not be here. She had not known how keenly she would need his smiling eyes. . . .

Laughter came from Ledbetter's table. The crowd in paper caps were betting on something—not on the cards. Juanita took advantage of their preoccupation. Molly was not observing her, Divitt was absent. Only Gabreau was watching, and Gabreau would not tell.

She laid the tray on a table and went softly out the side door. It was dim in the court. Juanita paused. Divitt might be about—Umberto. . . . She started toward the stair.

Suddenly some one was beside her. Some one with hot, horrible breath was breathing jargon into her ear. Juanita found herself caught and held.

"Let me go!" she commanded, and for an instant it seemed as if she would be obeyed, perhaps from sheer astonishment. Then her veil was thrown aside and Ledbetter's kiss smeared her face, Ledbetter's voice murmured insults. Juanita pressed back his face with her hands, loathing him more than she had loathed Umberto.

"Grosero! Insolente!" she cried, striking his face with her fists. "Hideous pig!"

Ledbetter released her as if she burned him. Juanita flew to the stair. At its top she turned to see Gabreau's squat shape in the parlor door.

The Comus ball! New Orleans gayety . . . color . . . life. Juanita whirls into it tomorrow, trailed by the marquesa.

PARK EMPLOYES AT STAG PARTY

CRATER LAKE NATIONAL PARK, Ore.—(Spl.)—With park rangers acting as hosts, over 150 park employes were entertained Wednesday evening at a "stag" party held near Government camp. The evening, a complete success, included a well balanced entertainment program over which Ranger Prince Callison presided as master of ceremonies. Refreshments consisted of "hot dogs," marshmallows and fresh apple cider.

Fast wrestling and boxing bouts, exhibiting considerable skill and hard punching, were features of the evening, as well as instrumental and vocal numbers. The party was marked by a feeling of good fellowship and is an indication the park season is drawing to a close. University football players who had spent the summer laboring at Crater lake, are due to leave soon to resume studies and begin football activities.

A number of the ranger force are scheduled to leave within a week to take up school teaching duties, with others ready to resume college studies.

Close upon the heels of the party, a dance, sponsored by the women park employes, was given Friday evening at the Government Camp mess hall.

ETHEL BARRYMORE NOT COMING HERE

Cancellation of her engagement to appear in this city early next month in the "School for Scandal," stage production, has been made by Ethel Barrymore, Archie Holt, manager of the local Fox theaters, announced today.

The cancellation was made by Miss Barrymore, well known stage favorite, because of ill health, which she has endured through most of her tour this season. She is cancelling all single night engagements.

This announcement will be received with much regret by local theatre-goers as great anticipation of the event has been expressed since it was reported that Miss Barrymore would appear here.
