LADY LUCK might be the title of Mme. S. W. D. Baroin at the Riviera where she won this beautiful fur-trimmed creation at a cost of nothing. Raffle tickets sold for 1000 francs each. But the night before she had been lucky at the roulette tables.

WHERE MEN ARE MEN and mountains reach up to greet the sky—that's America's great west. And this is Heaven's Peak seen from the Going-to-the-Sun Highway in Glacier National Park. The guide is pointing to the immortal beauty of the peak from a tunnel along the highway.

DEBUTANTE of the movies is Conchita Montenegro, who was given this title following a "civil war" in Hollywood when Fox named her and two others to the honors ordinarily enjoyed by the Baby Wagon Stars. She's 19, and—oh, exquisite.

MOROCCO'S SULTAN VISITED FRANCE to attend the Colonial Exposition at Vincennes, and here is the mark of his famous Black Guard passing the replica of the temple of Angkor-Vat en route to Vincennes. Sultan Si Mohammed Ben Youssef was given a brilliant reception and his Black Guard was one of the highlights of the exposition.

A COUNTRYSIDE IN MERRIE OLD ENGLAND with no traffic rush nor sounding of horns is this rustic scene in Surrey. The bridge which spans the Wey at the entrance of the village of Elstead is said to date back to the fifteenth century. Peace and quietude reign in this somnolent little hamlet, hedged by foliage and overhung with bright, fluffy clouds.

SOME CLASS to this duet. Mary Sullivan, hostess at the National Air Races at Cleveland, is holding the Shell trophy which will be presented to the woman winning the straight-away speed event.

WHEN ROYALTY HAS COMPANY, no display of finery is too gay. King Alfonso, head of the tribe of Bahugas who live on the military reservation at Fort Stotsenburg, Philippine Islands, is seen here with his family and court guards beside Sergeant Charles H. Cobb of the U. S. Army. King Alfonso's regal robes consist of an obsolete army uniform bedecked with campaign ribbons and insignia.

CHRIST TOWERS OVER ROME in this benign statue erected on the belfry of the Church of St. Curore in the Via Marsala. The statue is 20 feet high and is a gift of students of Salesiani Institute of South America. With a special system of illumination, it is visible all over the Eternal City.
