

BERRYDALE DITCH CLAIMS LIFE OF BABY GIRL, AGE 2

Evelyn Bradshaw Drowns, And Found Floating in Water By Tourist—First Aid Methods Fail.

Evelyn V. Bradshaw, two-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Dexter Bradshaw, who reside on North Riverside, where Mr. Bradshaw operates an automobile wrecking yard, was drowned yesterday afternoon at two o'clock in the irrigation ditch, which flows in back of the place. The tot was playing near the ditch, and accidentally fell.

Mrs. Benjamin Moore of Butte Falls, who is residing at the Rain-bow Auto camp, started across a wooden foot bridge spanning the ditch, when she saw the body of the baby, which had floated nearly a block. She immediately took the girl from the water, and called Dr. A. F. W. Kresse.

The baby was dead when Dr. Kresse reached the Berrydale district, he stated last evening, and he estimated that the child had been dead for almost thirty minutes. Fire Chief Roy Elliott was called, and assisted in giving artificial respiration, which failed to bring results.

The ditch is regarded as a serious hazard in the neighborhood, as a small child was drowned in the same water last summer.

Funeral services will be conducted from the Conger chapel Tuesday morning at ten o'clock, with Reverend Fowler of Ashland in charge.

MEDFORD AUTHOR BACK FROM CHINA AND JUNGLE HUNT

Edison Marshall Visits City On Way Home With Trophies — Far East Teems With Revolution Threat.

(By Iva Fawell)

Increasing coast communications by ship, telegraph, and radio are bringing about a great change in the living conditions of China and Japan. Edison Marshall, who has just returned from Indo-China, stated yesterday. He believes that it is no doubt a contributing cause of the economic depression in our country.

It is no longer possible to keep the two parts of the world utterly separated and it is evident such a situation cannot continue with humanity at one side of the ocean living on a marvelous scale and those of the other side on the verge of starvation, the noted author and traveler declared.

Pacing the floor and dropping his staccato-like phrases at rapid intervals, he told of the tremendous unrest in the east, of which no one seems to know the cause or solution. That there is a constant danger of a revolution in French Indo-China where the reds are active, was another point brought out.

"In China the prosperous natives who have always made their homes in the interior, are now moving into the foreign concessions where they are assured protection. In Shanghai and Hongkong, buildings are going up rapidly, due to the influx of the wealthy, but it is evident the situation will prove disastrous in the near future," Mr. Marshall said.

As the smile characteristic of Edison Marshall flashed across his face, the traveler went on to tell how the economic depression faded in importance as he started his journey inland to the big jungles of Indo-China—a forty-day trip crowded with some of the most exciting adventures of his big game hunts.

Through the courtesy and assistance of Col. Theodore Roosevelt, Jr., the American author was able to obtain letters and papers permitting him to make the journey. A French provincial, and his half-caste son accompanied Mr. Marshall back into the interior of the country, searching for some of the largest animals that stalk the globe.

On their trek to the jungles, the party encountered a race of naked savages, known as the Mois, who cultivate rice. The natives do not remain in one place for any length of time, but continue their wanderings constantly.

Day after day the hunters made the journey on the narrow trails carrying their equipment on two-wheeled buffalo carts, until they were in the country of elephants, tigers, leopards, and poisonous snakes.

What Mr. Marshall considers the finest trophy, the most difficult to catch as well as the most dangerous is the saiding—an enormous wild ox, the largest horned animal in the world. The immense beast towers six and seven feet in height, measuring from its shoulder to the ground. He was successful in "bowling one over," although the animal is a rare species, he related modestly.

In a very thick jungle, the animal turned at bay when attempts were made to capture it. The tracker was preceding Mr. Marshall and two natives were behind him. The first bullet landed in the saiding's shoulder, and as the animal turned, the second struck it between the eyes. One of the unusual incidents of the white man's jaunt was that all of the hunting was done on foot, and not riding elephants, as is customary. No white man accompanied him on any of his successful trips from camp.

Four tigers were placed among the trophies while in the heart of the tropical country, one measuring 19 feet, 7 inches. The largest ever caught, according to records, measured 11 feet, four inches. The two largest catches ever recorded, however, were made in India proper, and not in Indo-China.

A large number of photographs taken in the jungle, which showed all of the big catches made on the trip, were displayed by Mr. Marshall. "I'll show you some with my picture in them too," he remarked while sorting them over, "so you'll know that I didn't buy up a lot before I started home."

Spending three long hot days behind the screen of palm trees waiting for the heat to approach, was the price of bringing in the largest tiger. Mr. Marshall told of spotlighting for snipers, night feeding deer, when they suddenly saw the green eyes of a tiger flash. The animal started to charge as he was shot down.

"I was scared to death all the time," the hunter laughed jovially, referring to "meeting up" with the big game.

Other than a "few bouts with jungle fever," Mr. Marshall did not suffer a great deal in the unhealthy country, infested with numerous scorpions as well as the small krat snakes, more poisonous than the king cobra. As the water was unfit to drink, they washed their teeth in tea during the entire time.

The author, who is spending several days here visiting his mother, before resuming his journey Tuesday to his home in Georgia, arrived back in the United States at San Francisco. He stated that his next journey will probably take him to South America, a country he is greatly interested in, and which he has not yet visited.

His next serial entitled "I am Alive" will start in the American magazine some time during the winter months, probably December or January, he announced.

The complaint was filed by Mrs. Bee Hess, divorced wife of Sam Hess, who claims that she was given custody of the child at the time the divorce was granted. 'EARLY SETTLERS' GOOD WILL CHECKS NOW CIRCULATING

"Early Settlers' Good Will Checks" do not point to the people who have made their home in Medford for some years, but those who are going to settle their accounts early. Business people of the city who are willing to make early payments on their accounts are buying the checks, each worth $5, which have been issued by the Medford Lions club. They are redeemable at the Jackson County bank.

The "paper money" was printed through the courtesy of the Medford Printing company, and is being circulated by members of the Medford Lions club.

Before the money is redeemable it must have been used 25 times in payment on some debt, or account, which, it is hoped, will stimulate the settlement on these outstanding debts, according to the plan.

George W. Newberry, president of the club, spent yesterday afternoon in putting the idea into effect and sold a number of the bills early in the afternoon. Among business men who accepted the idea were Mayor E. M. Wilson, O. C. Alenderfer, president of the Chamber of Commerce; D. G. Tyree, manager of the investment department of the Copco; Alfred Johnson, local Standard Oil manager; Dr. D. A. Chambers, secretary of the Medford Rotary club; Carl Y. Tengwald, secretary of the Medford Kiwanis club, and E. L. Knapp, business manager of the Medford Mail Tribune.

Hanzlik and Hopkins have gone to Bend to make a similar inspection in the Deschutes National forest.

Both sales areas in the Crater forest are large, and the work of inspection by the three men, which consumed most of the week, was made chiefly to determine the future of these areas from the standpoint of reproduction.

MACMARR MANAGER IN WRECK, FOUND

THE DALLES, Ore., Sept. 12.—(AP)—State Police Sergeant Frank Grimm announced here today he had located Wayne Boynton, MacMarr store manager, sought since Monday when his automobile was found wrecked near Cascade Locks, Ore., in Seattle. Boynton was alive and well, Grimm said. Boynton told Grimm, the latter said, that his automobile had been crowded off the Columbia River highway by a big truck and he had suffered a nervous breakdown as a result of the accident.

Grimm said, however, that all evidence pointed to the car having been driven down the 87-foot embankment.

Boynton was accused of embezzling more than $500 from the MacMarr store at Burns, the officer continued, and also had two mortgages on his automobile.

PORTLAND, Ore., Sept. 12.—(AP)—It was the old magazine-college racket after all. But when he finally told her he'd "come around tomorrow and mow the lawn" if she subscribed she paid him $1 for the subscription.

She told police he failed to mow the lawn and she couldn't find any such name and address as he gave.
