CAPITAL TASTES MEDFORD PEARS

John W. Kelly, formerly political editor of the Oregonian, but now special correspondent for that paper in Washington, D. C., says in his column, "at the national capital: "Medford Oregon, is advertised these days by the push-cart peddlers on Pennsylvania avenue in the vicinity of the peace monument. Some fruit commission house received a shipment of Rogue River valley pears, for this is the fruit contained in the Medford boxes. After the pears are tastefully arranged on the push cart, the peddler uses a box as a seat. The fruit looks attractive and the pears sell for a nickel each, and are worth it. Inquiry revealed that none of the push-cart brigade knew anything about Medford or where it was located. They never heard of Oregon, but they knew the pears were delicious."
