

FATHER COMING TO TAKE LAD ON ORDER OF COURT

A certified copy of the decree and order of the circuit court awarding the custody of Bernard (Buddy) Sears, age nine, to the custody of his father, B. G. Sears of Santa Cruz, Calif., was forwarded this afternoon, by the sheriff's office to the sheriff of Lane county, for enforcement.

The lad is now with his mother, Mrs. Fay E. Northey, at McKennie Bridge, 54 miles from Eugene.

The father and grandmother are en route from California, for the boy, and will take him back with them, a telegram to the sheriff said.

Mrs. Northey, twice married and divorced, is alleged to have taken the child from the jurisdiction of the California courts and brought him to this city where her husband was employed as a shoe clerk. One of the conditions of the decree, is that no action will be launched against the mother on this score.

The mother instituted habeas corpus proceedings last winter against the father and the case attracted much local interest.

CENTRAL PT. BOYS WARNED BY COURT

Melvin White, 16, and Clarence Fry, 15, boys of the Central Point district, were before Judge Alex Sparrow in the juvenile court this afternoon, charged with stealing dishes and silverware from the Grange hall at Central Point, during the progress of a dance. Fry was paroled to the court, and White's case taken under advisement as it was his second appearance.

Judge Sparrow warned the pair, that "they were traveling with bad company" and urged them "to be snappy about mending your ways."

The assistant district attorney alleged that White has been accused of stealing bicycles, his father's gun, and "hi-jacking liquor" hid by patrons around the dances and traveling with "a tough bunch." His father said he "had turned against school" recently and refused to go.

STORY ONE

"They were persuaded that their own material well-being, progress and happiness were best insured by this country's keeping itself withdrawn from the rest of the world politically, and by its keeping trade barriers raised so high as to exclude competition in our markets. We were to depend strictly upon our own ingenuity and resourcefulness."

Not Self Contained

"Even as late as last fall, when the country was enveloped in depression, President Hoover in an address before the American Bankers association avowed that our country would 'be able to make a large measure of independent recovery because we are so remarkably self-contained.' Every well-informed boy and girl knows that so far as we being self-contained that we can not even set up a railroad engine, or install a telephone instrument, without first having called upon the resources of the nation."

"They know that we could not build an automobile without help from abroad. We can not even supply tea, coffee or chocolate for the breakfast table without laying upon the resources and labor of some far distant country."

"It is not to private enterprises, but to the government that the people look for action in every great national crisis. They look to it for succor, for protection and relief, even giving to it in the emergency of war, full dictatorial powers. It is sheer folly to say that the government is powerless in an economic crisis like this. If that is so, why should we concern ourselves with the administration of its affairs."

Responsibility Urged

"What difference would it make who was in control or what policies employed? Mr. Hoover urged most emphatically in the campaign of 1928 the responsibility of the government for the weal or woe of the people. In his Elizabethtown, Tennessee, speech, he said, 'Yearly the relations of the government to national prosperity become more and more intimate.' In that same speech he declared, 'The test of our government is what it does to insure the home is secure in material benefits and comfort.'

"Three successive Republican administrations have represented to the people that this government was attending to the business of its own people while holding itself aloof from any official connection with the great councils of nations. The developments show that it has been attending to the business of precious few of its own people and neglecting the rank and file throughout the country."

Women Must Act

"These are times for enfranchised women to throw themselves into the breach, not to rest so long as children by the hundreds of thousands are under-nourished and an unnumbered host of unemployed men and women suffer mental anguish and physical privation. Let us who are Democrats, with renewed allegiance to Jeffersonian democracy, redouble our efforts to induce other women to plunge into a study of the policies and practices now employed in the government and pass their own judgment upon them. If we rise to our patriotic duty and strive zealously and untiringly to strengthen our party organization, nothing can prevent our election in 1932 a Democratic president, and a Democratic congress."

Ask any teacher of cooking. Ask her which kind she uses in her kitchen

Three generations ago, our grandmothers raised their cakes and biscuits by combining soda and cream of tartar. Schilling and one or two others soon combined these two ingredients and called it Baking Powder. A few years later substitutes for cream of tartar began to appear

The tiny fluffy bubbles made by cream of tartar. The big coarse bubbles made by the substitutes. cheap in price. There is nothing distinctly harmful in them and they perform a creditable result. But the fact remains that cream of tartar baking powder is the only one preferred the world over by pure food departments, government agencies and dietitians. Ask any teacher of cooking which kind she uses in her own kitchen. She knows why. Ask her why. Then you will understand the Schilling standard.
