Pears Are In Season Now

Everyone is interested in good things to eat. And when good things to eat are easily made or prepared they are especially popular.

So when pears appear on the market they are greeted with pleasure by many. But there still remain some who seem to have no imagination regarding the various uses of pears in the menu. This fruit is so delicately flavored that it combines beautifully with other fruits, with meat and cheese of almost any type and can therefore be used as a salad, dessert or decoration in every season. It is so easily digested that it is among the first to be given to convalescents and may be used to supplement a dinner which is already sufficiently heavy in calories but seems to require the finishing touch which we have come to expect "Pears are in season," is therefore good news and we are giving you some interesting suggestions for their use fresh and canned for winter consumption.

Pear salads:

Pear Surprise
6 pears
1 lb cream cheese
1/2 cup preserved ginger
3 T cream
1/4 t salt
1/4 t paprika
1 T lemon juice
Lettuce
Jelly

Make a dressing of one-half the cheese, mashed and blended with the cream, finely chopped ginger, salt, paprika and lemon juice. Peel the pears, cut a slice from the base of each so that it will stand on the bed of lettuce. Core the pears and put a little of the cream cheese in each cavity, then chill. When ready to serve, place on lettuce, cover with dressing and top with a cube of bright colored jelly.

Pear Salad
1 package Lime Jello
2 1/4 cups boiling water
1 T lemon juice
Crushed pineapple
Pears

Dissolve Lime Jello in the boiling water and add the lemon juice. Pour one-half into a pan and let set in the refrigerator while preparing the pears. Fill cavity in each pear half with crushed pineapple, set upon chilled layer of Jello and cover with remaining Jello. Serve on lettuce with mayonnaise dressing.

JOBLESS FATHER GIVES LAST COIN TO TOTS, SUICIDES

DENVER, Colo., Oct. 14.—(AP)—A few small coins jingled in the pockets of Thomas Folger, jobless garage worker, as his daughters climbed on his knee last night.

"Papa is going to give you a surprise," he told them. "What would you like most?"

"Ice cream," chorused June, 10, and Marjorie, 8, and they clasped their hands in glee. Treats had been scarce of late in their lives.

"Ice cream it shall be," said Folger, "and if there's any change left, buy papa a cigar."

He gave them the coins—his last. Happily the children, accompanied by their mother, went to a corner store for the ice cream. When they returned ten minutes later the found Folger dead. He had shot himself with an old hunting rifle. Mrs. Folger said he had been out of work for months and that all of their saleable property had been disposed of.

Last week Folger attempted to have himself arrested by "confessing" several crimes in an effort to have his family cared for.

a cream of tartar baking powder or one of the substitutes? The substitutes are cheap in price. But many pure food departments—most dietitians—and most domestic science teachers, definitely prefer cream of tartar. Whether the difference be slight or great—there IS a difference, and Schilling prefers the kind that is beyond question. So would you, if you knew the facts.
