REED TRIAL JURY SECRETS BARED IN STATE AFFIDAVITS

Verdict Found On First Ballot Is Revelation-Coolness of Ashland Policeman Verified by Affiants

Albert W. Reed, Denver, Colo., youth, serving life in the state prison at Salem for the slaying of Victor Knott, Ashland policeman, last November, was found guilty on the first ballot before any discussion of the ballot before any discussion of the evidence, according to an affidavit filed by Charles S. Butterfield, foreman of the jury. A corroborating affidavit is filed by George W. Porter, another member of the jury. The two affidavits, with a dozen others, were filed Saturday by the district attorney's office in resistance to the attorneys office in resistance to the defense plea for a new trial.

This fact was heretofore unknown as the jury, before returning a verdict of second degree murder, pledged themselves to give no information about their balloting. The jury deliberated for 19 hours, evidently on the degree of the purply.

was fined $25 and costs.

The testimony in court is that Williams, who only went to the house last Monday as a boarder, and who claims he was unaware of the bootleg reputation of the place, had agreed with the arresting officers to "take the rap" for the women.

There was no evidence of sales on the part of Williams, and hence Judge Thylor was placed in a quandary by the peculiar situation, as he could take no cognizance of the agreement between Williams and the officer for the former to take the blame. Hence he only fined Williams for having a half pint in the hand has found in his room.

Williams, whose reputation is good, and who holds a business position in the city, declared he knew nothing of the alleged selling from the house.
