The Search Ends!

THE Lindbergh baby is dead. This tragic news which flashed over the wires yesterday afternoon, grieved and shocked this country as probably nothing has since the assassination of Abraham Lincoln.

Even stronger than the shock and sorrow, that such ghastly information brings, is a seething rage, that anything like this could have happened in this country of ours, that such an unspeakable thing, COULD be chronicled on the pages of our history—the history we have so long assumed to be that of the highest development of 20th century civilization.

If this tragic news does not convince us we are NOT really civilized and until the conditions that made such an inhuman outrage possible are removed, we can not CLAIM to be civilized, then nothing can.

If it doesn't arouse the people of this country, not only now, but a month from now, and a year from now, to the necessity of getting up on their hind legs and stamping this criminal monster down in the dust, until he can never raise his head again then again,—NOTHING CAN!

If we are to accept this Lindbergh atrocity, as we accept other atrocities,—register horror and indignation for a moment, then shrug our shoulders, shake our heads, go on about our routine business and forget about it—UNTIL THE NEXT OUTRAGE COMES ALONG,—then as before stated in this column, we might as well shut up shop, pull down the blinds, and escort Al Capone from the penitentiary to the White House.

If this outrage can't awaken the American people out of their indifference and egregious sentimentality toward organized crime, then they CAN'T be aroused.

But we believe it will. We believe this terrible crime will arouse the people of this country as nothing else could. We believe that it will mark an uprising, and start a movement that will not stop, until this country is made safe for decent and law abiding citizens, and for their children.

Just how that can be done, we don't know. But that it will be done, when the rank and file of this country MAKE UP THEIR MINDS TO DO IT, we do know, and in that faith in spite of the present dark hour, we regard the future of this country with every confidence in the "RIGHTNESS" of the eventual outcome.

What Will Lindbergh Do?

IF Colonel Lindbergh would lead a movement to clear this country of organized crime, stamp out that invisible government of underworld control, that actually rules us, the people would arise as one man, and follow him, wherever he might lead. But it is probably too much to ask of him—or any man in his position—at the present time.

While the discovery of his son's body, the removal of the suspense and uncertainty, is easier to bear, than if the baby's fate had always remained in doubt; still to the parents the shock and horror of it all, is something it will take years to overcome. Some wounds of the heart and soul, only time can heal; and there are cases where even time fails.

HOWEVER Colonel Lindbergh has throughout his career, proved to be such an exceptional character, that it may be that after the first affects of the tragedy wear off, he will regard such a crusade as his life work.

We hope so. For no man could lead such a movement, as he could lead it; no man could arouse the country, as he could arouse it. And the first job on that program, would be to hunt down the monsters in human form, responsible for this unspeakable crime, and give them as far as possible—the punishment they deserve.

"As far as possible" for there really is no punishment to fit such a crime. The human mind simply stands aghast at such a deed, and gropes in vain for any punishment that could either fit, or in any sense, expiate for it. That must be left not to our poor struggling humans, but to some higher power.

But, we repeat, the first thing to do, is to get these criminals, if they can be found, and demonstrate to the world that in this country, for such vermin, there is no escape.

THE next thing to do would be to clean up this country, make it so hot for every gunman, hi-jacker and second story man that from the lowliest thug, to the most exalted Beer Baron, there would be no place so dark and secluded, that they could hide.

Serve notice on them, that this country can no more be half criminal and half law abiding, than it can be half slave and half free.

And with that as a slogan, fight this war against organized crime until this country is once more a safe and a decent place in which to live.

Fehl Statement False.

To the Editor:

It has come to my attention that

Mr. Fehl, who is a candidate for the office of county judge, and others have made the statement that the past county courts have levied taxes up to the full limit of 6 per cent, as prescribed in the law of limitations for levying taxes. As a past county commissioner, having served for eight years, I wish to refute those statements by giving you a few figures. These were given to me by Mr. J. B. Coleman, county assessor, and which were published in his summary of assessment and tax rolls for the year 1930. These figures are for the county tax and county levy only and cover only those items over which the county court has any jurisdiction.

In analyzing these figures you will note that there has been a decrease in county taxes from the year

1922 to the year 1930, a total sum of $132,010.88. During this same

The Lindbergh Child, To Help the Idle, They Also Serve. Work for 15,000.

Copyright King Features Synd. Inc.

Ten minutes before this was written, at six-fifteen yesterday afternoon, the city editor brought word that reporters had been requested to come to Hope well, Col. Lindbergh's residence.

And at this moment comes the announcement that the Lindbergh child has been found dead. No more dreadfully shocking news could be imagined, nothing that could produce so great a horror of the depths of criminality to which this nation has been reduced.

Yet the dreadful end of a horrible tragedy will be for the unhappy parents almost a relief from the uncertainty, the constant wondering and worrying about the child by day and in the dead of night. It means the end of an agony that has lasted, week after week for 80 long.

It means, above all, that the little boy is forever beyond the reach of man's hideous brutality. His spirit is set free, nothing can ever harm him now. His parents must find what comfort they can in that thought and in the profound sympathy and affection of the entire nation.

The information given out by the governor of New Jersey is meagre, at this hour, only that the child's body was found "near the estate." How long ago the death occurred, is not stated. What happened can only be surmised—that the crime was that of an insane person, that it was an act of revenge, which is inconceivable, that the child died or was killed elsewhere and brought back, to prevent detection. A thousand theories are discussed.

But one blessed fact is established. The child is safe at last. It is not in brutal hands, crying for his mother. And she knows that her baby is beyond the reach of harm or suffering, and mercifully released from danger forever. She can think of the little soul at peace, the beautiful face, as she used to see it. And the child will have a grave chosen by her, and lie within reach of her loving thoughts and prayers.

Senator Robinson suggests a fund of two billions to take care of the idle. The President is said to favor it.

Why not go the whole way, and adopt the five billion fund suggestion made by W. R. Hearst months ago? This is not a time to make "two bites of a cherry." The money would not be handed to city politicians to be spent "for the good of the organization." Many undertakings might be selected and financed that would pay for themselves when completed, such as the tunnel under the North river built by New Jersey and New York that earns millions a year, and many other public enterprises highly profitable.

A horse called "Doc" died yesterday owned by E. R. Squibbs and sons. You never heard of him, race tracks never saw him, he lived and died in his stable, supplying serum to prevent diphtheria, enough to protect 41,000 children. Perhaps he will have in the heaven for horses as good a place as that reserved for Alexander's prancing Bucephalus, Mohammed's milk-white Alborak, or the chivalrous Roanoke.

"They also serve who only stand and wait."

This government having set aside money to provide employment, while helping J. Edgar Hoover's undertakings, ought to lend to the Pennsylvania railroad the fifty-five million dollars needed to complete the electrification of its lines between New York and Washington.

Millions have already been spent on the work, which may be stopped through no fault of the Pennsylvania railroad. Its management could not imagine what a depression was coming. The loan that the Pennsylvania requests would be useful to the whole country, employ 15,000 men more than two years, create orders for 88,000 tons of steel, many million pounds of copper.

It would involve more than one hundred electric passenger locomotives and much other equipment. Since the government has money to lend and the Pennsylvania can give perfectly good security, why not make the loan and let the 15,000 men work? If that is not practical, what at?

WHEN YOU GET ALL HOT AND THEN CHILLED TRY TO KEEP COOL.

A reader who puts a question which I think many others would like to ask, only they hate to embarrass me so much, wants to know about people exposing themselves to a cool breeze, say from an electric fan, when they are over-heated and perspiring from hard work or play or exercise. This reader does not believe that it is harmless, but would like to be convinced.

I have never believed it is harmless. All I contend is that no one suffers any illness from such exposure. I know very well that too sudden cooling off after warming up that way is likely to bring a lot of soreness and lameness in the muscles involved. That is a mechanical effect. It is unpleasant and for a while it may partly dislocate the victim, but it never makes him ill.

The working of muscle involves the burning of fuel, blood sugar, glycogen or animal starch, as it is called. The combustion of this produces an acid akin to lactic acid. Lactic acid is the acid which is produced in souring milk by the fermentation of the milk sugar (lactose) by the lactic bacillus which is naturally present in milk in large numbers. When the work or exertion is violent of course there is an increased oxidation of blood sugar and an increased production of the acid. The circulation increases in volume and rate at the same time, but sooner or later, according to the individual's physical condition, the production of acid material gets too far ahead of the capacity of the circulation and then the acid waste matter begins to accumulate in and about the overworked muscles. That has something to do with physical fatigue. Anyway, the worker or player begins to tire and takes a rest. That gives the circulation a chance to catch up. If the individual is in good physical training, he will not suffer any great soreness or fatigue next day, even tho he be careless about cooling off too quickly. If he is in poor condition, unaccustomed to athletic activity, he is likely to find himself pretty sore next day, even tho he is as careful as a museum mummy about undue exposure to the air.

Too sudden cooling of the surface of the region reflexly tightens cirgists from Rome have discovered what was left of Sodom and Gomorrah after the big fire.

More interesting is today's announcement that Prof. Roy Whitman of the University of Michigan has discovered in Mesopotamia what he thinks is the Zikurket, better known as the Tower of Babel.

Located in the ancient city of Akshak, it is a mound of earth about fifty feet high and three hundred feet in diameter, with a cone of sundried bricks, forty feet square, by way of reinforcement.

It might have been, when finished, about one-third the height of Governor Al Smith's Empire State building. The workers were not disciplined by the infliction of different languages, because there was real danger of their reaching heaven, since that shode, as we know now, must be several billions of miles above the top of their tower. They were disciplined for their presumption, innocent things, believed that heaven was just above the clouds.

The Republican party went wet in Ohio, as you know, and now that grand old machine is trying to go wet in New York. The Republican county committee was expected last night to advocate a plank in the national platform demanding repeal of the 18th amendment.

However, the country will know more about beer and such things when it hears next November from the millions of voters throughout throughout the country that never saw New York.

Two Americans who once thought they were rich and now know they are not, were asking each other, "Where would you advise me to put a little money abroad to be perfectly safe in case everything goes to pieces here?"

General William Mitchell, who was in the group, said: "The best is to leave your money in the United States. The next best is to put it in France, the best organized country in the world."

"The French have power to resist any attack from the outside, power to suppress any insurrection on the inside. They are powerful in the air, powerful on land, powerful at sea, powerful under the water, and especially powerful in their gigantic gold reserves. They have a great empire in Africa to which they can send their surplus production; that's the country that is solid."

Very able nation, the French.

We know it to the extent of four billions.

Yesterday London cut the bank rate to 3 1/2 per cent, cheapest money with one exception in 23 years. How came here, borrowed one hundred and fifty million dollars, without showing security, saying: "You cannot imagine how rich I am." The bankers said: "Here's the money."

James L. Rosenberg, an able American lawyer, shows that Krueger gathered here $150,000,000, of which 95 per cent went to Europe. American finance making no effort to keep track of the foreign business, never making where the money went.

American business men can testify that if they tried to borrow one thousandth part of one hundred and fifty millions they would have to show their birth certificate, wife's wedding ring and every detail of their business. Even then they would get only half what they needed.
