Medford Youths Visit Lindbergh Home While Hitch Hiking to N. Y.

(Dick Applegate, former prominent Medford football star and his chum Vic Dallaire, left Medford on April 3 for a hitch-hiking trip to Mexico City. They traveled with extraordinary rapidity through California to San Diego, then to Dallas, Texas, but the glimpses of Old Mexico en route didn't encourage them to turn south so they passed cars and trucks going in the direction of New Orleans. Printed below is the account of their travels from Dallas to New York via New Orleans, written by young Applegate. We believe this traveltogue will not only interest the many friends of Dick and Vic, but all the people of Jackson county.)

It must seem strange that this installment of a travelogue intended to be between Medford and Mexico is addressed from New York City, but the explanation is contained in the rest of the story. After leaving Dallas, Vic and I cut across into Shreveport, La., where we saw our real Old Colonial home. The town is about as pretty and sedate looking as any we have seen yet. Just out of the city limits we ran across an old cotton seed oil factory, running full blast. Negroes do all the manual work and the oil is stripped except for a thin cloth. No shoes at all, either. The heat is awful, but they don't seem to mind it, although they are continually around the furnaces. The cotton seeds, little fuzzy balls like pussy willow buds, are fed into one end of a giant heater, and when very hot, are drawn off and pressed. The immense pressure and heat forces the oil out and it is strained and put in tanks. The oil has a sort of sickly sweet odor which the negroes like. For a ten-hour day of extreme hard work, they receive a dollar and twenty cents!

FROM there we travelled across the rest of northern Louisiana by motor truck, seeing a great number of the famous bayous, which look like stagnant inland lakes. These bayous are the homeland of all mosquitoes, some there growing to the size and ferocity of eagles. The Mississippi was a disappointment to us both, being at Vicksburg, both narrow and extremely dirty. That is the nature of the brute, I know, but after looking at the clear water of our western streams, mud is nothing to get shrilled about. The little town of Vicksburg seems never to have recovered from the heavy fighting during the Civil war, which most of the inhabitants seem to think the South won, judging from their conversation. Half the population of 18,000 is negro, and we ran across an old Confederate soldier who related to us, with much chuckling, an event in which he killed one negro for talking back to a white woman.

We went out and rambled through the old battle grounds, seeing the fall-in trenches and decaying cannons, right where they were left after the siege. We saw where a Union gun-bat was sunk, and where Faragut cut the blockade chains in the river. It was a long jump from there to New Orleans where we were picked up by a gentleman named Wilson who had an interest in an oil company in Mexico, and he promised us a business directory.

THE Kentucky Derby was run the day before we got to Louisville, of course. We always seem to miss the good things by such short ways! We did see Churchill Downs, tho, and not all the horses had been taken away. It was a long jump from there to Cincinnati, but we caught a ride thru, and took it. I remember that Mary-Lee and Dorothy Roberts were there all last summer, so we stayed there two days, looking over the town so as to be able to converse intelligently with them about it. "Vax you offer in Zinzinatti!" There is a forty-eight story building there, which they charge you twenty-five cents to ride up in an elevator. But I outsmarted them! While Vic was at breakfast one morning I went down and looked at the directory, and found a business office on the forty-seventh floor. Then I wrote a letter from me to them, and addressed the envelope plainly. Carrying this prominently in my hand, I went to the express elevator, rode the "forty-seventh" at the elevator boy's impressively, waved the letter under his nose, and up I went—and then walked the extra floor! Try that on the Empire State building next time you are in New York. I did, and it won't work!

We were again lucky after leaving Cincinnati, and caught a ride clear thru to Washington, D. C., going thru West Virginia and Virginia, and part of Maryland. The first thing we saw there was the new Washington Memorial at Alexandria, which was being dedicated that day. It has since been voted one of the ten most beautiful buildings in the United States. The Washington Monument, of course, dominates the city, so while Vic was looking for a cheap (1) hotel, I went up in it in an elevator. The whole country side seemed right beneath my feet. The next day we both walked up it, five hundred and fifty feet. But we rode DOWN in the elevator. I bought some post cards at the top.

When we went thru the Smithsonian Institute, seeing the art galleries, Aviation building and natural history section. We saw the "Spirit of St. Louis" and Wright's first airplanes and dozens of other interesting things. The White House, of course, was not forgotten, nor the place and place for hearing objections thereto and for the examination and allowance thereof. NATHALIE MAY HAMILTON, Administratrix.

to the place where the body of their baby was found. Feeling here is terrible against the murderers, as indeed, it must be everywhere. As Trenton we went by the crematory where the little body was cremated. Swarms of little people were gazing at the place.

Jersey City was reached about nine o'clock, just as it was getting dark (daylight saving time, four hours later than Medford time). We took a ferry right into the heart of Lower Manhattan, into the Battery, passing within two blocks of the Statue of Liberty, which was all lit up. The truck we were on was hauling spinach, so it went directly into the market section. And there is what makes us feel good! Every where we turned were Medford faces and apples! Almost every produce house had them displayed prominently, and the name Medford IS VERY well known. Most of the brands shown in that particular section were Bear Creek, Sno-Bow, and Stamp. Did those familiar labels look good to us?

On Fifth Avenue a couple of days ago, Vic stopped at a fruit stand and asked to look at the label on some pears. There were two kinds—Medford and Santa Clara, both rather familiar to me! Day before yesterday Vic left to visit relatives in Quebec, Canada, but the big city holding more allure for me, I decided to stay—with a kid who lives out in the Bronx, that I met in Fort Worth, Texas. We told him we'd see him at N. Y., and he went via New Orleans, and he went via Chicago, and we got to his home exactly one hour after he did! Another little coincidence.

So since Vic has left, I have been in the Woolworth building, the Empire State building, where my little purse didn't work, and I had to pay a dollar to see the whole world from the top, where I bought some freak cigarettes, and saw the famous Chrysler building, the New York Central Grand Central Terminal, Saks Fifth Avenue store, Macy's Broadway and Macy's Seventh Avenue store, the Hotel Astor (for lunch). I've ridden on sub-ways, the "L", or elevated, the tube under the East River to Brooklyn and Queens, the tube under the Harlem river, the Fifth Avenue double-decked bus, and once, even, the taxi. The colleges that I've now seen include Columbia, New York U., Fordham, the College of the City of New York (I had never heard of it, and it has eighteen thousand students and eleven thousand night students) and Yassar.

THIS morning the kid I am staying with, Blancy Grange, and I went down to Wall Street, and then out to Coney Island. Coney Island is a dirty old hole, and quite a disappointment to the boy from the country. Whenever the New Yorkers address me that way, tho, I start in about Crater Lake, and that holds 'em till I can change the subject! I still retained the idea that the Medford Hotel was a big building until I went to the Cathedral of St. John the Divine, last night. I almost believe that they could put Roxy Anne in that place! That reminds me that we're going to Roxy's theatre, in the Hotel Taft, tomorrow night—and I've been here less than a week! In another week, little old New York will hold no terrors for me!

But now that it still does, I am just Medford's walking enthusiast. DICK APPLEGATE, New York, May 20th.

Williams Creek

WILLIAMS, May 28—(Sp.)—Mrs. Mills, who has been with her son in California and was ill several months, is at home again.

Mr. and Mrs. Stephens of the Redwood highway were Sunday dinner guests of Mr. and Mrs. M. L. Hines.

Mr. and Mrs. A. L. Blodgett called at the C. W. Roberts home Sunday afternoon.

A far heavier vote than usual, 129, was cast at the Williams precinct Friday. The boys, many using their midnight. The members were George Spauld, chairman, Clive Davidson, Judge Charles Cougle, Mrs. Stella Stratton and Mrs. C. W. Roberts, clerks.

Mr. and Mrs. Banks Newcomb, Mr. and Mrs. George Krsdel and Mrs. Stella Stratton drove to Hills Sunday to visit Mr. Newcomb's sister, Mrs. Chas. Rose and family. It was Mrs. Rose's birthday.

Stearl Vahrenwald, who has been in the St. Vincent hospital in Portland for a major operation, came home Sunday. He is still very weak but improving rapidly.

Mrs. Lissie Bigelow and children of Grants Pass visited Mrs. Mary Topping Thursday and attended the graduating exercises of Williams high school at the Orange hall.

Delmar Sorrells and Jimmie Wilson spent the week-end camping on upper Williams creek. No bears, cougars nor rattlers appeared so the boys had to be satisfied with the thrill of learning to cook on a camp fire and sleeping on a log ground.

Monte Hamaker was on the creek Thursday exhibiting a Ford de luxe coupe which was greatly admired, but not sold.

Small trees and shrubs planted on the school grounds Arbor day are all growing nicely and will be a great improvement to the school grounds.

Hank Albertson has been cutting oak timber off the John Kincaid ranch. He will haul them into eastern Oregon to be sold for making into pulp.

Lee Packham has installed a pumping plant to irrigate his garden and yard. Much labor has been expended, but they are building an attractive home.

Geneva Brand of Grants Pass visited her grand parents, Mr. and Mrs. M. L. House Sunday.
