Carole Lombard To Appear Wednesday

(By Jack Retlaw)
She had never had a chance in life. Her family was of the type that was perfectly satisfied with comparative poverty, and they thought she should be satisfied with it, too. On the other hand she wanted to rise above all this. As a modiste's model, she had ample opportunity to display gorgeous clothes and meet the very elite of society. It made her envious, naturally.

She had been going out with a young mechanic who could not understand why they should not go ahead and get married on the few dollars that he had saved.

The inevitable quarrel came, not alone with her lover, but her family as well. She had made a "hit" with one of the wealthy "patrons" of the modiste's shop, and he recognized her beauty and cultural ambitions. Coincidentally, her mechanic lover also met a wealthy woman who became infatuated with him and wanted him to marry her. . . and she would give him anything he desired.

"Sinners in the Sun" featuring beautiful Carole Lombard and virile Chester Morris, which is coming to the Fox Craterian theater tomorrow, is one of the cleverest modern day romances filmed in some time. It is well worth taking "time off" to see.

Today will be the final opportunity to see that spectacular Howard Hughes epic of gangland "Scarface."

Edmond Lowe Stars In Drama At Holly

Edmond Lowe, star of "Attorney for the Defense," cross-examines Clarence Muse, negro character actor, in vigorous fashion for one of the scenes of the picture. Lowe's father was one of the best known attorneys in San Francisco in the early days of the century and it almost broke the parental hearts when Eddie, having received degrees from Santa Clara university and Leland Stanford, elected the romantic footlights instead of the dignified profession of Blackstone. As he stands up close before the flashily dressed negro and interrogates him with all the uncanny shrewdness of a great criminal lawyer, Lowe gives one the impression that he might have gone to great heights had he followed in his dad's footsteps.

Of interest also, is the fact that the negro, Muse, is a lawyer himself. He received a degree in 1917 following his graduation from Dickinson college in Carlisle, Pa.

"Attorney for the Defense" will show at the Holly for four days starting June 1. Throughout the nation critics have acclaimed this production to be the height of entertainment.
