

ELDER DANIELLS LONG IN MISSION FIELD OF CHURCH

Elder A. G. Daniells, who spoke Saturday morning on the subject of "The Divine Care and Protection of the Christian" at the Seventh-day Adventist conference, is quite generally regarded as one of the "apostles of the denomination." In 1884 he went as one of the early missionaries to the great island field of the South Pacific, where he labored for fourteen years, his work extending over Australia, New Zealand, Tasmania, Fiji, New Hebrides, and other islands. At first his labors were confined to the evangelistic line. Later he was called to the executive work, and under his administration, a very strong and efficient organization was built up. Before he left that field, the church membership had grown to some ten or twelve thousand, and of institutions he had founded a large publishing house, a college, and medical sanitarium. The work in that island field was so well established that it has ever continued to grow till today it forms one of the strong "Division Conferences" in our world organization.

In 1901 Elder Daniells was called back to America and elected to the presidency of the General Conference, which placed on his shoulders the responsibility of the world field, which position he held for twenty-one years. When he was called to the presidency, our world constituency was about 90,000. It is now well over a third of a million. His coming back to America was a great opportunity, for the denomination had outgrown its early organization and greatly needed revamping. His natural qualities together with his large experience fitted him for this work. Taking the whole world into his vision, his first concern was to establish a strong home base, yet to rapidly press on to the regions beyond. The Seventh-day Adventists have their work, firmly established in nearly every country on earth, there being no nation, tribe, tongue or people of any considerable size where their workers are not now located.

The leading features of the Adventist work are an intense evangelism, a thorough educational system, with emphasis on the Bible, while not neglecting either the sciences or vocational training, an up-to-date medical work, and an extensive publishing work. Their many institutions have helped to give character and stability to their work. Their colleges and other schools, sanitariums and dispensaries and publishing houses are quite numerous in North America, and Europe and are rapidly extending to Asia, Africa, South America, and the islands of the sea. Elder Daniells is now field secretary of the General Conference with his residence at Washington, D. C., and though in his seventies, is still taking a very active part in the denominational work.

Miss Coates, Cookery Expert To Conduct Safeway Cooking School, Fox Rialto June 15

Miss Margaret Lenore Coates

With its main objective to help home-makers of southern Oregon, find new ways of preparing the same old three-meal-a-day, and solve other household problems, as well, the Safeway Stores Homemakers' Bureau will launch a three-day cooking school in Medford. The sessions which begin Wednesday afternoon at 2:00 o'clock, Thursday and Friday, June 16 and 17 from 2 to 4 o'clock each afternoon.

The school will be conducted at the Fox Rialto theater on West Main street in this city and will be under the personal supervision of J. F. Mashburn, district manager for Safeway Stores with headquarters in Medford. Mr. Mashburn has selected the Mail Tribune as the medium for advertising this outstanding event in southern Oregon.

Margaret Lenore Coates, well known western home economist, will be in charge of the school which has been planned to include many unusual features of particular interest to women.

According to Miss Coates, a member of the staff of the Safeway Stores Homemakers' Bureau which functions under the national direction of Mrs. Julia Lee Wright, this bureau is the only organization of its kind in the west, and its purpose is to gather and distribute new ideas on homemaking, not only to Safeway Store patrons, but to all women in the community who are interested in managing their homes. Miss Coates, representing the bureau, invites all interested persons to write in for free information on any household problem. Each request is answered with the up-to-the-minute information which she declares makes the bureau so essential to enthusiastic homemakers.

Many novel features have been planned for the cooking school and Miss Coates has arranged her programs to cover the principal phases of meal-planning and preparation, entertaining within the home budget, and other problems of serious importance to the homemaker.

In announcing the selection of Miss Coates to conduct the school here, Mrs. Julia Lee Wright, national director of the Homemakers' Bureau, declares that she is a lecturer of wide experience with a fund of new methods. Her ideas, she says, are original, her recipes soundly practical and her advice on marketing and expenditures is based on first-hand experience. In addition to her practical equipment, Miss Coates possesses a charming personality.

Old Derby Road Being Improved
PROSPECT, June 4.—(Special)—The old Derby road which turns off at the McLeod bridge is being widened at its intersection with the Brophy road. Some years ago the people of this community could only reach Medford via this road. Except in summer the mud was often axle deep and the Brophy road was even worse. Old residents are the only ones who can really appreciate the present roads and highways.
