CARD OF THANKS
I desire to say you for not giving enough votes in the primary, the candidate for sheriff, who would have appointed me a deputy.

There are several reasons why people fail to fill the buttery with the red and watery strawberry, now so cheap and plentiful, for winter devoting: (a)—The alcoholic content of a strawberry is nil; (b) A diet of nothing but strawberry jam causes pimples; (c) How do we know that there will be any bread to smear with the said jam; (d) maybe federal production of strawberry jam will be ordered.

Congress is implored to hurry up and get through, or they will not be allowed to go to the Republican and Democratic national conventions and get drunk.

Many rushed to the seashore yesterday, and returned with a rumble-seat full of wild flowers, and a shoe-full of sand.

Politicians are now getting ready to move heaven and earth and the University of Oregon in the fall campaign.

The theory, long espoused in these parts, that cussedness if given enough rope would hang itself, has failed. This is due to the cussedness being longer than the rope, and possessing no suicidal tendencies.

CONSCIENCE AT WORK
(Palo Alto Times)
A school teacher in another town who lost her job when the board of trustees voted three to two against her was comforted the next day by three of the members individually a m e around to announce that they were the ones who voted in her favor. And it has been my hunch that those were the three who cast the adverse ballots.

The situation has arrived at the point where everything would be lively, if all caught with a still in the kitchen stove, could roll their own trial jury.

As near as can be ascertained, none of the 1932 graduating class have picked out a grindstone, upon which they will place their tender noses.

There is only one able-bodied payroll left in the county. Steps have been taken to pester it until it moves away. Then something constructive will be done, like folding up the side-arms of a window, and installing cushioned benches at the Bill Gore walking corner.

"That a Boy, George!"

MAYOR George Baker arose on his hind legs in Portland the other day and delivered a verbal broadside in his old time form. He announced that the next crack from the curbstone mud-slingers would be met by a suit for slander; and the next crack from the blackmail press, would be met by a suit for libel. He said he had held office a long time, that he realized a certain amount of abuse and vilification was to be expected, but that there was a limit beyond which no self respecting American citizen could be expected to go and that he had REACHED THAT LIMIT.

THAT a boy, George! In hitting back at his traducers, Mayor Baker will have not only the support of the law, but the support of an aroused public opinion. The right thinking people of Portland, and of the state, are tired of this ceaseless barrage of slander and libel, which is only a smoke screen, behind which a few disgruntled "outs" hope to get "in". They too want a showdown, and have only commendation for a public official who demands one.

THE time has ceased when patience on such matters can be regarded as a virtue. The time has ceased when this irresponsible mud slinging and character assassination, can be successfully met by silence. Fire must be met by fire, the offensive of muck and slime by a counter offensive of what is right and what is true. More power to Mayor George, and as he cracks the heads of the liars and poison spreaders, the forces of decency and fair play throughout the state will wave their hats high and give him a cheer!

President Hoover's Message

THE following message to the Ladies' Home Journal from President Hoover shows how eager he is to aid in the important work of increasing home owning in this country if the congress will let him: TO possess one's own home, however small, is the hope of every family in our country. That is the American ideal, born of an exquisite sentiment, nurtured by a long national tradition, and proved right by its innumerable practical advantages. Many things have conspired to frustrate this hope to a lesser accomplishment than the welfare of the nation demands. The amazing speed of our industrial development has caused us to build cities faster than we could properly plan them. The result too often has been that our people have been overcrowded, improperly housed, denied the opportunity to own the home that each has dreamed should be his castle. Perhaps the wonder is that we have done as well as we have, under the circumstances. Nevertheless, we can and should now do better.

FINANCING of home ownership has not kept pace with improvement in design. Almost any other desirable possession can be purchased in installments on the basis of 25 per cent in cash and the balance secured on the property and somewhat upon the character of the buyer. A home and the home owner are the best credit risks in our country. There is no character credit comparable to a family struggling to own its home. But finance of homes too often continues on terms comparable to work, save their money, apply the savings to payment for their house is not only a sound basis of credit but a sound basis for the nation. Every interest in life ties them to maximum effort to succeed. They must have credit upon terms adjusted to their little of cash and their much of character. To advance the whole finance of homes, whether they be in towns or on farms, I proposed to the congress a measure to set up a federal system of Home Mortgage Discount Banks, to which may belong building and loan associations, savings banks, deposit banks, farm loan banks, etc.

The broad purpose is to provide for the home owner a comparable background of stable credit with that we have already provided nationally for the business man through the Federal Reserve Banks and for the farmer through the Farm Loan Banks and the Intermediate Credit Banks. The plan and method is not to engage the new institutions in the business of providing direct loans but to give impulse, security and safety and lower interest rates to the already existing institutions—especially the mutual institutions—in order that they may extend the fullest measure of credit to world-be home owners.

THERE are certain emergency phases which render the creation of this system immediately desirable. Great numbers of people are losing their homes because of inability to secure renewal of their present short-term mortgages. They are losing their savings of years and undergoing irreparable hardships because of the inability of institutions to give them these renewals. Beyond this, despite everything that has been said, a canvass of the country shows that there are several thousand communities where there is today a new demand for new homes which cannot be constructed for lack of credit. The immediate result of restoring credit facilities would be the resumption of a large amount of construction work, which is one of the most important keys to unlock the problem of unemployment.

This plan has found sympathetic support and indorsement of thousands of savings banks, building and loan associations, country bankers and, above all, from would-be home owners. I am in hopes it will have early enactment into law.

Read H. R. 10236. See Your Washington. Monuments of the Happy A New Supreme Court Room.

Washington is most beautiful in June, parks, monuments, trees, flowers, all at their best. This is the time to visit the national capitol. From every corner of the United States, railroads take you there, comfortably and safely, many with low rates for summer.

Those going in automobiles, and especially interested in economy, will find an admirable automobile parking place in Potomac Park, with good beds, all conveniences maintained by the government, at moderate prices.

Washington, with its beauties, monuments and memories, belongs to all the people of the United States. The old should see it, and live again the thoughts and feelings of their youth. Standing beside the Potomac, you see at one glance the noble dome of the capitol on the hill, the monument erected in honor of him who was called "of good men, the greatest, of great men, the best," and the Lincoln memorial, with the beautiful stone bridge leading across the river to the new Mount Vernon highway.

Happy they, whose monuments, great or small, are built; whose graves are dug and filled, whose names are safe forever, among those that have done their best. To live again, in hills, forever, would be pleasant. But the important thing is to live well, and work well, here, in the life that we know.

The really old, to whom the Civil War is not merely a part of a history book, seeing the beautiful rose gardens by the Potomac, the well kept parks and roads, will be interested to know that the care of all this beauty is in the hands of a most efficient and devoted man named THYESS S. Grant, Third, grandson of the U. S. Grant.

Children should see Washington. No better vacation trip. Be sure to show them, close to the White House, the Washington monument pointing up to Washington's present residence. Say to your children: "Providence seems to have put that monument where all presidents see it, every hour, to remind them of Washington's advice about keeping out of foreign entanglements."

Washington thought this country could take care of itself when there were fewer than four million Americans. Why cannot 120,000,000 Americans take care of themselves, without advice or help from Lausanne?

The most impressive spot in Washington is the small room of the supreme court, with its handsome columns, the bench for the judges, and enough, but not too much, room for lawyers and attendants.

That room is to be abandoned, and the court moved from its place under the capitol dome to a big new building, now building, pure white, very handsome, with fifty times the room of the old court.

Chief Justice Taft wanted the new supreme court hall, and it was ordered built. He will never see it. Be sure to see the old court room when you go to Washington. It seems to represent the sort of government, planned for this country originally, before we became the billion dollar land, when simplicity and efficiency were American ideals, and George Washington called the city named for him "The Federal City."

Two ideas are suggested for the old court room. One, an old fashioned idea, would have the court hold its last session each year in the old room, to keep traditions alive.

The other, more modern, suggests that since our Republican party admits that we have outgrown the supreme court, and need a world court to tell us what to go, it would be a good plan to keep our old supreme court room as a sort of an annex of the world court, a place in which that court could meet, to issue orders intended particularly for the United States?

See, without fail, the magnificent Folger Shakespeare collection and building, just completed, east of the capitol. It is a beautiful building, and contains the world's most interesting collection of books and pictures, dealing with Shakespeare's life and times.

As an introduction to your visit, read the book on Shakespeare by George Brandes, the great Jewish scholar, of Denmark.

The Folger collection, it has been said truly, will be for all time the mecca of Shakespearean students.

TRAINING A CHILD FOR THE NEUROTIC LIFE

In this the third session of the school for nervous imposition the preceptress begins the lesson with a brief review of the preceding lesson. Remember how it went: "Yet if I allow her to go without her food she loses color and seems to get thinner, too. (She is a four year old child who dwales an hour or more over her food and refuses to eat it, and if she is compelled to eat it probably ejects it from her stomach shortly afterward) I never have to scold or spank except at mealtimes. This affects me disastrously. I get nervous indigestion before I've even looked at food." So that is the nervous indigestion! In his excellent little book on "Nervous Indigestion" (Paul B. Hooper, New York) Dr. Walter C. Alvarez first gives an instructive chapter on the effects of emotion on digestion, and then opens Chapter II with a candid statement that "nervous indigestion is a convenient term which to designate all those gastrointestinal disturbances for which no organic cause can be found." In other words, if you are perfectly normal and healthy, as the teacher declares this little girl is, yet refuse your food or get into a quarrel with your neighbor or receive a little note from the tax office apprising you that they're onto your little scheme to defraud the government, just before dinner, you are entitled to have "nervous indigestion"—the just why you blame it on your nerves when in fact your own inner consciousness or your own conscience is to blame, perhaps. In her first recital the preceptress expressed the anxiety she feels for the effect her quarrels with her present pupil will have on a new pupil she expects to arrive in September. She is also somewhat perturbed over the effect of the bickering on her own digestion right now. She is right about both cases. She explains that "the finest pediatricians in the city offer no remedy" for the four year old child's habit of dawdling for an hour or more over a meal and obstinately refusing to eat anything, or if forced to eat then vomiting the food shortly afterward. The pediatricians are generally second rate physicians—that why they purport to be specialists. It's a racket, and in this free country it has the sanction of the medical organization. At least the organized profession here has taken no step to curb the evil of specialism, also resolutions have been passed and committees appointed to deal differently with the evil. If quarreling and bickering over the child's diet or appetite or preferences is the cause of the child's habitual vomiting, the mother's nervous indigestion and the said outlook for the little stranger in the ofing, and I think that is the cause, then wouldn't the obvious remedy be the best? Why not try it out for a while anyway. It can't do any harm. The remedy is simply to cease quarreling, bickering, scolding and fussing about what the child eats or does not eat. At the proper mealtime place suitable food on the table and let the child partake or eschew it. It is nobody's business to try to determine what the child shall like or not like. Nobody with the child's interest at heart will notice or make any comment whatever on the child's disposal of the food served. Of course there are a number of little minor considerations to be met, but there's the gist of it, all we can crowd into these narrow columns.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

Infra-Red and Ultra-Violet
Please explain what Infra-Red and Ultra-Violet mean. I am thinking of taking sun lamp exposures in my home. Is there any particular type or kind you recommend? (E. S.)
Answer—The rainbow or spectrum thru a prism is always the signature of Roy G. Biv (red, orange, yellow, green, blue, indigo, violet). Rays beneath the red (Infra-red) are invisible and give warmth or heat. Rays beyond the violet (ultra-violet) are invisible and give chemical effects. Plenty of infra-red in any radiant heat, or even in a hot water bottle or a soapstone or any other ordinary method of applying heat to the body. I do not advise the purchase or use of any such lamp, except for special purposes, under your physician's direction.

Honest Optician
Not being able to read or do close work I went to an optician to have my glasses changed. He said there was something wrong back of the eye and sent me to Dr. — an eye specialist. This doctor told me the glasses were all right but the kidneys were causing the trouble with my eyes. I am 45 years old. Name of a good physician who will be reasonable. (Mrs. C. C. A.)
Answer—If all persons who hold themselves out as being able to diagnose and treat common errors or refraction or defects of eyesight were as honest and capable as your optician here would be no occasion for criticism. If you have a regular medical adviser or family doctor, why not ask the doctor who found what caused the impairment of eyesight to recommend one for you? I can give no information about costs, fees or terms, in any case. (Copyright John P. Dille Co.)

Jenkins' Comment

survey of costs and efficiency in commercial egg production in Oregon. This survey brought out two points of particular interest to us in this section of the state: 1. Feed costs are lower in Southern Oregon than in any other part of the state. 2. The number of eggs per hen per year is also lower in Southern Oregon than in any other part of the state.

The first of these is favorable; the second unfavorable. The lowest feed costs in the state mean that conditions in Southern Oregon are fundamentally favorable to the poultry industry here, for in order to succeed in the poultry business, as in any other business, cost of production must be kept low.

But, as we have demonstrated in the case of potatoes, pears and prunes, large production per unit is also essential to success. If we are to produce eggs profitably on a commercial scale, we must have high production per hen.

It is probable that production per hen is low in Southern Oregon because of lack of careful and scientific attention to flocks. The right kind of laying stock and careful culling of flocks would undoubtedly bring production per hen up to where it ought to be.

Southern Oregon agriculture needs wider diversification. Commercial poultry production, which, according to the department of agriculture, has withstood the depression better than any other agricultural industry, will help materially to diversify our agriculture.

We ought to be paying more attention to it.

Piles Go Quick

Without Salves or Cutting
Itching, bleeding, protruding piles are caused by bad circulation of the blood in the affected parts. The parts become weak, flabby, almost dead. Only an internal remedy can remove the cause—that's why salves, suppositories and cutting fail. Dr. Leonard's prescription, HEM-ROID, succeeds because it removes congestion, restores circulation, heals and strengthens the diseased parts. HEM-ROID has such a wonderful record of quickly ending even piles of long standing, that Jarmin & Woods says one bottle of HEM-ROID Tablets must end your pile agony or money back.
