FINANCES NEEDED FOR REED APPEAL TO HIGHER COURT

Gus Newbury, chief counsel for Albert W. Reed of Denver, Colo., serving a life sentence in state prison for conviction of the murder of Victor Knott, Ashland policeman, last November, intimated today that he would file a motion with the circuit court asking that the county furnish funds for the appeal to the supreme court if other sources failed. The court recently granted an extension of 60 days for filing of a transcript of the evidence.

Attorney Newbury said that he was endeavoring to raise the necessary finances, but that Colorado friends and relatives of Reed were pinched for money and so far had been unable to secure it. Reed's mother, brother and sister reside in Colorado. Reed's proposed appeal is based on alleged misconduct of a juror, faulty identification and discovery of new and important evidence. Attorney Newbury expresses confidence that if the appeal is taken a new trial will be granted by the state supreme court.

Letters received recently by his counsel from Reed show that he maintains reasonable hopefulness. He is employed in the state prison machine shop.

No trace has been found of Paul McQuade and "Lee Jackson," indicted with Reed for first degree murder. Reed in his testimony placed the blame on their shoulders, claiming that he was not present when the shooting occurred, but several blocks away. Residents of Ashland filed affidavits supporting this contention in the motion for a new trial.

"Under the initiative measure," the board said, "petitions for which are now in circulation, the school would be operated next biennium, not at a saving of $2,000,000 as now outlined, but would require increased appropriation for buildings of several millions," and would mean "repudiation of bonded indebtedness totaling large sums, and the abandonment of valuable physical plants and properties."
