Garden Movement Praised by Portlanders.
An interesting note to add to the convictions of local Garden club members is found in the Portland Spectator in an address to the Portland Garden club. The opening paragraph reads:

"The garden movement is one of the greatest forces toward achievement of beauty in the United States," said Mrs. J. W. Fowler in her annual report as president to the members of the Portland Garden club assembled at Cedarhurst, the country home of Mr. and Mrs. Guy Webster Talbot, on Tuesday afternoon. Mrs. Fowler referred to the statement of a noted garden authority, and her words emphasized the fact that the club aims to further the fine art of gardening, not only in the private gardens of members, but in the city and state and even further a-field.

Local flower fanciers agree with Mrs. Fowler, it was shown at the last garden club show, the largest in the history of the organization. One of the outstanding features of the show was the emphasis placed upon the opportunities for creation of beauty through development of the garden movement, improvement of highways, and arrangement of flowers within the home. The increased interest of the public in things beautiful was evidenced in the large crowd of spectators visiting the show as well as in the additional exhibits.
