

BUTTER AND EGG PRICES HOLD TO UNCHANGED BASE

PORTLAND, June 16.—(AP)—There was no change in general butter trade conditions for the late season of the produce exchange. On the open market stocks moved out well. Cutting supplies are less liberal and occasionally hard to obtain. This kept the trend of the trade good. Demand is good for all lines, but top scores are in far the best call at the moment.

Butterfat appears steady to firmer in spots.

Trading in the egg market remains more or less of steady character with little change in the price. Efforts to advance the price to aid far output from storage have thus far failed.

Rather slow trading tone is suggested generally in the market for live chickens. Receipts are not heavy but are showing more or less neglect from buyers.

There is a somewhat better local jobbing demand for home grown celery. California stock is about out here and the better local quality is an aid.

While there may not be so much snap to the hothouse tomato market at the moment, the movement is still favorable and the price generally held.
