

Grand Hotel

Serial story of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's "Grand Hotel," starring Greta Garbo, John Barrymore, Joan Crawford, Wallace Berry and Lionel Barrymore. From Vicki Baum's novel, directed by Edmund Goulding.

Installation Three.

The Grand Hotel items with life. Preysing, the industrialist; Grusinskaya, the dancer; Flaemmchen, the public stenographer; the Baron, had son of a good family; Kringelein, the clerk, dying of an incurable disease and taking his first fling at life, are all registered at the Grand Hotel. Grusinskaya, the dancer, weary of fighting to hold her success, decides to cancel her performance, but is caajoled into changing her mind.

While she was speaking Grusinskaya rose—with the grace of a dancer she picked up the Chinese robe

"And this same man took you?"
"No—another man."

that had fallen to the floor and although there was only one other woman in the room—she held the robe around her.

She crossed to the mirror and looked at her face, running her fingers through her hair. She gently massaged under her eyes.

"There was silence in the room—neither of the women spoke. Suzette got madam's clothes ready. She crossed the room, put the case containing the dancer's famous pearls down on the dressing table and opened it.

Grusinskaya looked into space—silence—dead silence.

Suzette knelt down as if to put madam's stockings on for her. Grusinskaya pulled her foot away.

"I can't dance tonight—"
"It will pass—it will pass—come."
"But I can't dance tonight."
"But madam cannot do that."
"Now is the time to cancel—to quit entirely. I feel it. Everything tells me—enough—enough!"

She leaned forward against the dressing table and her hands unconsciously touched the pearls.

"The pearls are cold," Grusinskaya said. "Everything is cold—finished—it seems so far away—so threadbare—the Russian—St. Petersburg—the Imperial Court—the Grand Duke Sergei—dead—Grusinskaya—it's all gone!"

She threw the pearls away, down upon the floor.

enoy a signal that there was trouble. As Pimenov closed the door, Grusinskaya spoke into the telephone.

"Madame Grusinskaya will not require her car—she will not be going to the theater," she said.

Pimenov made a grand comedy bow. He would try to tease madam out of her mood.

She glanced at him without smiling, crossed to the dressing-table and sat down.

"It is time for the performance," Pimenov said.

"The performance—the performance—the performance," the dancer said under her breath.

It was a hysterical outburst. It was not a woman who was just temperamental, it was something deeper than that. She was very near a nervous breakdown.

"Poor little Lisaveta," Pimenov said, "she still has her stage fright—it will pass."

Pimenov knelt by Grusinskaya—he was chafing her hands, he attempted to soothe her.

Now Grusinskaya drew her hands suddenly away.

"It is not stage fright—it's something more—can't you see—can't you understand?"

"What—what is it?"

"Last night there was no applause."
"There was—there was."
"There was not—listen to me, Pimenov. Last night—that theater —half empty—I danced for those few—I danced till I felt my heart would burst—I was frantic—I finished—I waited—exhausted—I could not see—I waited—I listened—I peered into the blackness, waiting—but the applause didn't come—nothing. A man in the box—and just the clues behind—it is passed, Pimenov. We are dead—it's finished."

There was a sudden knocking at the door.

"Mierhelm," Pimenov said.

"The door opened suddenly. He was the theater owner.

"What is this that you have cancelled your car? Who am I that I should wait like a fool at the door? And here on a whim, you cancel your car. Have you forgotten there is a performance? Do you know the time? Or, are we all mad? Am I your manager? Have we a contract? Have we obligations? Am I blind?"

"... Oh, is that the time?"

"I'm cancelling the engagement," Grusinskaya said.

"Oh! Madam is cancelling the engagement. Madam has chosen a funny time for such a funny joke. He ha, ha—hurry, come on. Tonight—there's a line in front of the theater since 6 o'clock. The house is jammed to the roof."

"The house is not full—is it really full?"

"Packed to the ceiling. Hurry—get dressed. And what an audience—the French Ambassador—American millionaires—Princess Ratville—er—er—"

"Oh—but it can't be."
"Oh, come, madam—please come," Suzette said.

"All right, Suzette—quickly—hurry."
"We will wait," Pimenov told her. "You are late. Hurry." Mierhelm said.

Mierhelm went over to the telephone, he picked up the receiver and said:

"Tell Madam Grusinskaya's chauffeur to bring the car."
"The dancer has decided. What will happen? Read tomorrow's story."

Dodge-Durgan Wedding
Lovely Event in Ashland

At one of the loveliest weddings of the summer season, Miss Edith Dodge, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Louis Dodge of Ashland, and Walter Durgan, son of Mr. and Mrs. H. S. Durgan of Eugene, were married Wednesday, June 30, at 8:30 o'clock at the Congregational church of Ashland.

The service was read in the presence of about 150 relatives and friends of the couple, before the altar braked with Madonna lilies and lighted with tall white tapers, which formed a setting impressive in its celestial beauty. Madonna lilies and garlands of amylax also marked the pews and a touch of blue depth to each side of the altar.

A candelabra was placed directly back of the lilies at the altar and at the altar rail, and light tapers in crystal holders added light to the scene from the church windows.

The candles were lighted by Miss Ellen Galey, while soft music was played by Joseph Hartley preceding the ceremony. Robert Dodge, brother of the bride, sang Schubert's "Serenade," accompanied by Mr. Hartley at the piano, with Miss Galey playing the violin obligato.

The Tannhauser Wedding March was played for entry of the bride and her attendant. Attired in a long white crepe gown with veil, falling from a bandeau of braided tulle, she carried an arm bouquet of summer flowers and was attended by Miss Isabelle Silver, who wore a pale pink frock of charmingly simple lines.

They were met at the altar by the groom, his best man, Joe McKeown of Eugene, and the minister, Rev. Geo. V. McClure. The simple ring ceremony was used.

Following the wedding, guests continued to the Dodge home on the Boulevard, where a reception was held.

Refreshments were served in rooms attractively decorated in an abundance of roses. A stand of roses supported the wedding cake, topped with an arbor of pink roses.

Out-of-town guests for wedding and reception were: Mr. and Mrs. H. S. Durgan of Eugene, Mrs. Will T. Abbott, Los Angeles; Mr. and Mrs. R. W. Price and daughters, Ruth and Catherine, of Portland; Mr. and Mrs. Edwin L. Knapp of Medford, and Mrs. Nellie Loomis, Oakland.

Following the reception, the bride and groom left on a short honeymoon to Lake o' the Woods, after which they will be at home to their friends in Corvallis, where Mr. Durgan is practicing law.

Both young men are graduates of the University of Oregon and well known among members of the school set here. Mrs. Durgan is a member of Alpha Delta Pi sorority and of Mortar Board, Theta Sigma Phi and Phi Theta Upsilon honorary groups. She was winner of the Gerlinger cup during her junior year and was president of the Associated Women Students during her senior year. Following graduation, she was society editor for the Eugene Register.

Mr. Durgan is a member of Phi Sigma Kappa fraternity and of Delta Sigma Rho and Oregon Knights honorary groups. He was prominent in debate activities while on the campus.
