"Humpty-Dumpty!"

THE more we see,—and hear—of Speaker Garner the less we think of him. His first commendable act, since he was bitten by the presidential bee, was recorded yesterday.

THE explanation appears to be that Garner couldn't stand prosperity. Like many before him, the sudden vision of occupying the White House turned his head.

TO the importunities of his backers to "DO SOMETHING" and step into the national limelight, he promptly turned the speaker's desk into a political rostrum.

SOMEWHAT disgruntled, but still determined to make a showing, Speaker Garner proceeded to throw his own unemployment relief bill into the legislative hopper.

SEARCHING around for another trial balloon, Garner hit upon a provision in the federal relief bill that would make a direct appeal to "the voters."

THREE ATTEMPTS TO MAKE A SHOWING AND EVERY ONE A COMPLETE FAILURE. Small wonder that as far as the political stock market is concerned, Garner has suffered a deflation.

HEARST NAMED ROOSEVELT. SPEAKING of Garner, in this week's "Time," the inside story of the democratic convention, and the nomination of Roosevelt and Garner, is told.

ACCORDING to Time—and this excellent magazine is seldom mistaken,—Roosevelt's nomination was definitely check-mated, and everything was set for the nomination of Newton Baker.

SO the adroit and resourceful McAdoo got busy. The long distance wires became hot, first to the Pacific seaboard, then to the Atlantic.

WHISKEY PARTY PRECEDED DEATH REYNOLDS SCION

TO this suggestion, she said, she replied: "No, no. I told him my love for him was too good to be impaired by any one thing."

COUPLED with her revelations of her brief wedded life was Walker's story of the tragic night when, after Smith had been "revived" at Libby all night, the tobacco merchant announced he was "going to end it all."

QUESTIONS by Solicitor J. Erle Michael were directed at uncovering all possible information concerning the relationship between Walker and Libby.

HEAVY Drinking Told. Libby's testimony that she could remember nothing save the actual shooting between 11 p. m., July 4 and the afternoon of July 6, was coupled with the evidence given by others of continued heavy drinking at Reynolds for several days.

DURING her one lucid period during the time of the mental lapse she described, Libby said, she saw Reynolds kill himself.

COMING to Monday night, 24 hours before his death, when he said he was going to end their marriage because he was not able to make her happy, she broke down.

AS she told of the physical handicap which she claimed had not impaired her love for him, or caused her to entertain his suggestion that she have an affair with another, she cried:

"ON! Such agony. Oh, God!" "I Feared Own Sanity.

WHEN Walker reached the night of the death in his testimony he swore that the hospital incident happened after he and Libby had helped the mortally wounded youth, and that he became faint and fell to the floor, the nurses entering as Libby was helping him up.

HE testified he had seen nothing out of the ordinary pass between young Reynolds and the brunette torch singer the fatal night, although he admitted Smith had told him a night or two before that he had begun to question his own sanity.

AT this time, Walker said, he and Reynolds went to a hotel and drank themselves to sleep.

WALKER said later, at the party, Libby threw her arms around him and cried:

"Smith doesn't love me." "Walker said she was "very tight" at the time, but denied she kissed him.

"GOING to End It All." About midnight, he said, Reynolds entered the house, and was joined by his wife. Entering Walker's room, he witnessed, she remained about 15 minutes, when Libby ran out, followed by Smith.

WALKER said Smith returned to the reception room in a few minutes, the young millionaire saying he was going away and not coming back.

"I'm going to end it all," Walker quoted Smith as saying, following announcement that a trip around the world was being undertaken.

AS he made the suicide threat he pitched his pocketbook to Walker, told him to wait, and went upstairs.

A MOMENT later came the sound of a shot. Walker said Blanche Yurka, New York actress who was a guest in the home, began calling him. Then came a scream from Libby's room, and she ran out, dropping on a bench on the mezzanine balcony.

INVESTIGATION revealed Smith near death, lying on a bed on a sleeping porch adjoining the bedroom used by him and his wife.

CAUTIONED Silence. Walker said he cautioned Libby not to talk at the hospital when he heard her telling everybody how Smith had several times placed a gun to his head and threatened to shoot.

WALKER explained that Mrs. Reynolds' shoes and sweater, found in his room, must have been left there while she and her husband were there.

WALKER admitted that at the hospital he said "Whatever happens, there's some secret about this matter I'm going to carry to my grave."

HE denied, however, that there was any truth in this statement, or that he had withheld anything from investigators.

W. N. Fulcher, night watchman at Reynolds, contradicted other witnesses regarding the time of Mrs. Reynolds' retirement the fatal night, saying she was in the yard about 12:30, a half an hour before the shooting.

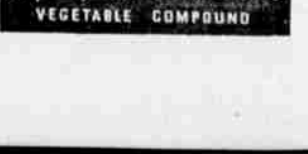

HE said Walker came up and joined her, and that in a moment Smith called out from the upstairs porch, asking what the noise was.

WITHIN 10 minutes, he said, he heard a shot, and then heard a car drive off. He said he did not investigate the shot.
