Gates Defines "Good Sport"—To all the fishermen who have for years condemned their fellowmen who fished with bait instead of using the good sportsmanship of adopting a fly, Bill Gates' message of yesterday brings a revolutionary turn to their belief. "Fly fishermen aren't good sports at all, according to Bill Gates," Bill Hammett informed a group this morning. He says the guy who offers a fish artificial bait, giving him no chance to win, is the lowest form of angler. The man who fishes with edible bait at least gives the fish a chance at a meal. "Caught he feeds me, lost I feed him," says Mr. Gates.

Jenkins' Comment

COMES then a surprise. The Wranglers sing their last song and crack their last joke, and the diners settle back for the oratory. But the loud speaker blats: "Ladies and gentlemen, this concludes the evening's banquet. We will adjourn now to the dance."

No oratory, after all. Who ever heard of a banquet like that before? Or ever will again, for that matter. This is an original country.

SPEAKING of oratory, Boone Dodson told this one at Lakeview: Down in Oklahoma, in the free and easy days, a man wandered into the sheriff's office. "I've come to give myself up," he announced.

"Well, it's the sheriff asked. "What, it's this way," was the answer. "I went to a banquet last night, and a fellow got up and talked for an hour. Then he talked for another hour. So hauled out my old six gun and killed him. And here I am."

"You're in the wrong office," the sheriff told him. "They pay bounties at the clerk's office over across the hall."

THE dance, sponsored by the Twenty-Thirty club, is held on an open-air floor over on Main street. Members of the club, with a canny eye on the treasury, bark hoarsely: "Don't up, boys, and have a dance. Stop! Hang back. Do you want the Twenty-Thirty to go broke?"

How the devil do these Twenty-Thirty boys expect the visitors to step up and dance if they won't introduce 'em to their pretty wives and sweethearts?

BUT don't blame 'em too much. These caravanners, with their wives thoughtfully left at home, can't be trusted very far.
