CHICKEN'S SHIN BONE USED TO DETERMINE COD LIVER OIL ASH

ST. PAUL—(AP)—Shin bones of baby chicks have been added to the list of aids to science at the University of Minnesota farm school.

The vitamin D content of cod liver oils now can be ascertained, says H. A. Halvorsen and L. L. Lachat, chemists, through examination of the chicks' shin bones, or tibias.

Groups of day-old chicks are fed mixed diets, including the cod liver oil in varying amounts, for five days. The birds then are killed and the lower left leg bone of each is removed, dried and crushed.

After being treated with alcohol and ether, the crushed bone is "ashed" in an electric furnace. The percentage of ash in the bone indicates the amount of calcium or lime deposited. Vitamin D assists in the depositing of this substance.

A large percentage of ash indicates a strong shin bone and an oil rich in Vitamin D content.
