

INSIDE STORY OF CAMPAIGN COMES LONG AFTERWARD

Public Will Know Real Reason For Smith-Roosevelt Break Eventually Says Political Observer.

By Byron Price (Chief of Bureau, The Associated Press, Washington)

Usually the complete story of a campaign does not come out for years afterward, when all the central figures have published their memoirs and passed on.

That will be true of the present campaign. Some day—but not soon—the public probably will know the inside story of the break between Roosevelt and Smith, for instance, and the truth about the pressure exerted by the wets and drys on President Hoover.

For the present it is possible to answer a few of the questions which seem to be troubling inquiring minds:

Who was the actual author of the "thumb-nail" democratic platform adopted at Chicago?

It was the product of no one man. It originated in the Roosevelt campaign. Senator Cordell Hull of Tennessee began work on it weeks before hand. Those consulted included Newton D. Baker, Owen D. Young, a near-completed draft was put on paper in the Washington law office of A. Mitchell Palmer after Palmer had conferred with Roosevelt.

Much credit for the final condensation belongs to two men from the realm of newspaperdom: Gilbert Hitchcock, the Omaha publisher, who was the platform committee chairman, and Charles Michelson, the celebrated publicity director of the national committee.

What influenced G. O. P.? What was the basis and genesis of the republican prohibition submission plank?

Republicans in congress drafted such a plank after the anti-prohibition republican organization in New Jersey went on the warpath. The Ohio primary and the withdrawal of John D. Rockefeller, Jr., from the dry cause had a great effect just before the national convention.

Mr. Hoover's desire from the start was to recognize wet sentiment in the party, but not to go as far as the democrats. He accepted the submission plank as filling these specifications. He was unwilling to go any further, even telling his lieutenants at the Chicago convention he would refuse to run on an outright repeal plank. Of course there never was any prospect the convention would go that far.

Why is Garner Running? Why did Speaker Garner accept the democratic nomination for the vice-presidency, a post which he himself ranks as less powerful than the one he already holds?

Mr. Garner is an intense party man. In addition, he does not speak Hoover. The split between the same political language as President has some of the features of that historic antagonism between Woodrow Wilson and Henry Cabot Lodge.

Probably there is nothing Mr. Garner desires so much, politically, as to see Mr. Hoover defeated. He felt his acceptance of a place on the ticket would greatly increase his opportunity to help in that direction.

Why is Ohio Important? Why all the emphasis on Ohio in the present campaign?

Among the really sound reasons are the size of her electoral vote—the fourth largest in the union. Secondly, a state in which independent voters have been alternately electing both democrats and republicans to state office over a long period, would seem inviting from both party viewpoints. Finally the struggle there on the prohibition issue was bound to be unusually bitter and well staged, because Ohio is the home of the Anti-Saloon league.

There are other elements which to the lay mind appear based almost entirely on speculation. Only twice since the civil war has Ohio voted for a loser for president. It got a great deal of credit for the democratic victory in 1916, when Wilson carried the state and lost every neighboring state.

With many politicians of both parties it has become a fetish that a president cannot be elected without the support of "The Mother of Presidents."

Adrienne Displays Latest Modes For City At Craterian

Advance showings of the fall modes in fashion, in the smart combinations of wine reds, poinsettia, loganberry, plum brown and hyacinth, for street, afternoon and evening, were strikingly displayed for the Medford public last evening from the stage of the Fox Craterian theater, in Adrienne's annual fall revue.

Numbers modeled were selected from the stock of Adrienne's store, and David Macowsky's fall lines, which he brought from San Francisco. C. T. Steward acted as master of ceremonies.

The promenade of the new creations was interspersed with dancing by LaMira Beck, a solo by Merland Tolleson and Miss Genevieve Brown, both of whom were accompanied at the piano by Effie Herbert Yeoman.

Mannequins for the evening were Dorothy Gould, Alice Prock, Dorothy Egan, Carol Reames, Juanita Griffin, Bibb Jean Young, Blanch Fried, Jean Hamilton, Ruth Young, Grace Hargis, LaVonne Anderson, Margaret Childers, Arvilla Burns, Dolores Holbrook, Dorothy Paley, Margaret Boyce and Gertrude Boyce.

Jaques Lenox invites you to view latest fall ready-to-wear and millinery as displayed by mannequins at her shop tonight, 8 o'clock.

How High Is Waistline Paris Wars Over Answer By Diana Merwin. PARIS.—(AP)—The fashion world faces a style war over winter clothes. The hemline and waistline are the battle fronts on which, designers say, the conflict will be waged. One side in the skirt skirmish will defend the cause of longer skirts, with the hemline about eight inches from the ground. The other sounds a battle cry for skirts as short as 12 inches from the floor. Neutrals favor a hemline halfway between ankle and knee.

The eternal conflict centers on the question "How high shall the waistline be?" One army favors a waistline about two inches below the bust, while a second advocates a demarcation an inch below the normal waist.

Sees Slimness As Rule. "Slim bodies are the rule which will govern the coming winter styles," says one of the most prominent younger couturiers. "Women's demand to look slender calls for just one line—a semi-high waist which is suggestive of the Empire, a molded bodice and a plain skirt which is flat, but not tight, about the hips."

"I believe skirts will be slightly longer. Keep an eye on evening hemlines, for the day is coming—and not far distant—when day skirts and evening skirts will be approximately the same length."

Simplicity is a guide rule on which most designers agree. "There will be no style 'revolution' this year," says a couturier who clothes many of the smartest women in America and Europe. "This is not the time for an extravagant style. Pocketbooks won't stand it, and many women believe it to be bad taste in these times."

"A simple line built of less expensive fabrics is in demand. Colors may be brighter in order to add a note of variety when luxurious trims are not used."

Belle Disappearing. Belle will be less used to indicate waistlines than last season, many designers say. Sleeves will be an important item in the design, although probably not large. Detachable fur pieces to be worn with Major Parties Fight For Rule Over Congress (Continued from Page One) their principal efforts for the congressional elections still was a matter of speculation to Capitol observers. But Watson, a candidate for re-election in Indiana, gave it as his opinion that senatorial campaigns could be co-ordinated with the presidential drive.

The Republican leader further said he believed Indiana, Illinois and Ohio should be a major battle ground. In the first two states, Republican senators are up for re-election. In Ohio, the Democratic seat of Senator Bulkeley is on trial this year.

G. O. P. Rule Dangered. Watson also told newspapermen that whether a Republican senate majority would be maintained after November was "a very close question." To the same query Hatfield replied affirmatively, adding: "Congress today is divided by the closest margin since the restless period of the war-time change from Democratic to Republican rule. Democrats hold the house by a narrow edge. Republican control of the senate has been cut to actual equality by the recent death of Senator Waterman of Colorado."

With congress so evenly divided it is regarded as a possibility in discussions of Capitol observers that Hoover or Roosevelt—may have a congress under domination of the opposite party.

A novel Saturday morning matinee will be featured by the Fox Craterian theater this week in co-operation with the Jackson County Relief association. Don Geddes, manager of the Fox Craterian, has wired for a special picture, which begins at 10:15 a. m. Instead of the usual admission charge, those who enjoy the Saturday special matinee must present, at the box office, a quart of eatables or a quart of sugar. Three empty quart jars with covers will also gain admittance to the benefit movie program.

Canned goods and jars, secured during this matinee, will be used by the Jackson County Relief association in furthering the fine work already under way by that organization.
