GOLD BEACH RIOT VICTIM WROTE TO GOVERNOR MEIER

MARSHFIELD, Ore., Sept. 12.—(AP)—J. C. Leith, the first witness called in the summary hearing concerning alleged lax law enforcement in Curry county, testified before Circuit Judge Brand in Gold Beach today that he had been "struck" and knocked down by Moss Averill, Gold Beach resident, in a riot which allegedly followed the shut-down of the Gold Beach Electric company the night of October 31, 1931.

Leith, whose letter to Governor Meier, following a grand jury hearing last spring, resulted in the hearing, is manager of the Gold Beach Water, Light and Power company, a rival power firm.

An attachment on the Gold Beach Electric company was served by Sheriff R. H. Turner on the night in question. Officers and patrons of the Gold Beach Electric company allegedly participated in the melee which followed.

Leith declared Averill was a participant in the "riot" and said several others also were involved. He said he could not state definitely that E. R. Costello, his employe, was struck but that he did know Costello received severe bruises in some manner. Costello corroborated Leith's testimony.

The hearing was adjourned over Tuesday, a state holiday, but will be resumed Wednesday. It was ordered by Governor Meier after "representations had been made to him that the 'riots' in Curry county were not being faithfully executed and enforced." Grant Williams, district attorney, and R. H. Turner, sheriff, are the officials at whom the hearing is directed.

A grand jury last spring failed to take any action after an investigation of the trouble. James O'Brien, a state police officer who was sent to investigate after Leith had written to the governor, reported that in his opinion the full details of the trouble had not been presented to the grand jury.

FISHERMAN HOOKS INDIAN IN CHIN TO CHEAT RAPIDS

THE DALLES, Ore., Sept. 12.—(AP)—Anglers who visited the Columbia river at Chilo Falls in search of Chinook and silver salmon Sunday, hooked and landed an Indian instead. Tom Nye, patriarch of the Yakimas, was strolling along the promontories watching the young bucks dip the huge fish from the river. Suddenly he stumbled and fell from the cliff into the swirling rapids.

The shouts of the Indians drew the attention of white anglers who occupied every vantage point on the rocky bank at the lower end of the rapids. They saw the struggling Indian being carried rapidly toward the whirlpool 150 feet below them.

Bert Ralph of The Dalles, cast his spinner hook and hooked Old Tom in the chin. Slowly he reeled in, drawing the Indian steadily nearer the bank. Near the bank, however, the swift current was too strong and the hook tore loose from the Indian's chin. But other fishermen meantime had obtained long poles which they thrust out over the water. The Indian seized it and was drawn safely ashore.

KEATON DIVORCE SWELLS LIST OF FILM QUARRELS

HOLLYWOOD.—Well, Natalie Talmadge Keaton finally did it—got a divorce from Buster.

The action has been threatened for some time. Buster's friends never took seriously the talk that a final separation would result. The little spats, like that after the unamusing comedian took their two young boys airplane-riding to Mexico over Natalie's objections, were considered simple disagreements.

Buster's intimates say the actor never considered them anything more. There was a reconciliation, ostensible, at least, after that flare-up, and for a few weeks all seemed peaceful again. In July they separated finally, and the other day Natalie's uncontented plea for divorce was granted.

So after 11 years is written "go to another Hollywood romance. That makes the 1932 list of broken marriages in filmland rather startling with the Ann Harding-Harry Bannister split the most sensational (in its "quiet" way), the Ruth Chatterton-Ralph Forbes break, long threatened, culminating in plans for a Reno divorce, and the Lowell Sherman-Helene Costello break among others leading in interest.

HOLLYWOOD GATE HARD FOR YOUNG WRITER TO CRASH

By Robin Coons.

HOLLYWOOD.—It was about a year ago that Carl Erickson, an ambitious lad who couldn't get into a studio any other way, broke through an upstairs window and landed right in the midst of a story conference, as he had planned.

A group of executives, headed by Darryl Zanuck, production chief, sat around a table with writers and they were talking naturally, about stories. In pops, without ceremony, this tall youth and before any of them can recover, he had stated his case. He wants a job as a writer.

Zanuck admires his nerve so much he gives him one. And Erickson, after doing duty in the reading department, writes "Stranger in Town" for Chic Sale and joins the writing department to complete an unusual success story.

But it was only the other day I learned that Darryl Zanuck himself once had as much trouble crashing through the iron-bound system of exclusion that characterizes all studios. A volume of short stories entitled "Habit," bearing the 1923 imprint of a local publishing house, tells the tale.

Zanuck had been trying in vain to land on a studio writing staff, and had been met with the unflinching answer, "We sign only authors." By "author" he meant someone who had a book between covers. So Zanuck became an author. He had these old short stories neatly printed, wrapped in a lurid jacket, with his name at the head of every other sheet, and armed with his volume, tried again.

"You want authors? I'm an author now," he said, and offered the proof. He was signed.

It does not follow, of course, that the way to become either a staff writer or a production chief is to crash through a window or publish your own stories. In either case, you'll probably be thrown out, more or less politely.

Those hundreds of unsolicited manuscripts that are returned unopened by studios every year may include a few worthwhile screen stories, but the majority, to judge by the letters of would-be screen writers concerning their efforts, are simply rewrites of the latest screen hits.

A horror picture inspires more horror stories, a romance evokes more romances, and a certain type of comedy brings in its wake a flood of "originals" based on that idea. Scientists who create monsters were favorite heroes after "Frankenstein," for instance, and "Emma" inspired numerous amateur "authors" to realize the drama in aged housekeepers.

Aside from the fear of plagiarism charges, should they open any such manuscripts, the studios feel justified in their attitude by the law of averages, which would make the work involved overshadow the chance of a story discovery.

Joan Blondell Now Appearing at Holly

Director Mervyn LeRoy made "Big City Blues," now showing at the Holly theatre one of the fastest moving movies to date. From the opening line of the picture to the closing show, there isn't a dull moment. Joan Blondell is partly responsible for the speed of the picture and Walter Catlett and his enormous array of wise cracks help finish out the job.

Director LeRoy has also inserted plenty of music to liven up the show. Particularly appealing is the negro, Clarence Muse, singing "Every Day Can't Be a Sunday." The short subjects, the feature of which is a Ruth Etting comedy is also filled with music. "Can't We Talk It Over," "Funt House Serenade" and "Auf Wiederseh'n My Dear" are three numbers sung by Miss Etting in this subject.
