"Bird Of Paradise" At The Craterian

The fiery Latin temperament of Dolores Del Rio permits her to give one of the most impassioned performances of her career in "Bird of Paradise," which opens at the Craterian theatre today. As an excellent foil for her, Joel McCrea rises to new heights of virile impressiveness. How she triumphs in sacrificing herself to the barrier of civilization forms the climax of this undying romance of the South Seas.

Axe Throwers Coming

Oregon has its cowboys, with their twangy songs of parades; the South has its melodious tunes; "Way Down East" has its old-fashioned songs and dances—and now Oregon, the land of the great woods, has its own "Oregon Loggers," who bring the songs and tunes they sing as they wield the mighty axe or draw the crosscut saw, as they harmonize among themselves around the bunkhouse fires at night. The Oregon loggers, six of them, and their leader, six-foot-three "Paul Bunyan" Lawson, will be at the Holly theatre next Wednesday and Thursday.

day and will perform just as they have countless times in the evening after their work in the Oregon woods. The boys sing, hoo-down, yodel, throw axes, show how the lumberjacks and loggers enjoy themselves in the cool of the evening in the Oregon logging camp. There's no polish to the act, but that's because there's no polish to a logging camp.

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION" NOW AT ROXY IN SOUND

"The Birth of a Nation," which has been acclaimed all over the world as "the supreme motion picture," returns to Medford today for a four-day run.

Years ago this great picture was shown at the old Pique theatre at $1.50. Now the film will be shown at the exact spot, the new Roxy, theatre, but with added sound making it more thrilling than ever before. D. W. Griffith used 18,000 people and 3,000 horses in filming this masterpiece.

WHEELER AND WOOLSEY IN COMEDY AT STATE

A South-of-the-Border resort, where men are caballeros and girls are señoritas, is pictured with all its romantic glamour in "Girl Crazy," all-star melange of mirth and melody, which opens at the State today. A western dude ranch is the background for the hilarious adventures of Bert Wheeler, Robert Woolsey, Eddie Quillan, Mimi Green, Dorothy Lee and five beauties.

Now At The Holly

The role of Mears in "The Last Mile," which opens at the Holly theatre today, has come to be known as the "star maker part." This characterization in the stage production launched Clark Gable on the road to fame. Gable did the role created by Spencer Tracy, now a picture celebrity also. Preston Foster, who plays the role in the screen version, played it in the stage production also and his performance in the picture places him among the outstanding actors of the new season.

"What is society's responsibility for ever-increasing murders? What shall be done with the murderers?" "The Last Mile" does not pretend to give an answer, but murder on the level of murder is not that solution. "The Last Mile" will be at the Holly for three days starting with today.

"Red Headed Woman" At the Rialto Today

"Red Headed Woman," the widely-read novel of a stenographer who capitalized on her sex appeal, is on the screen at the Rialto theatre for today and tomorrow. Jean Harlow, whose famous platinum-blond tresses have been changed to flaming red, has the title role. Practically every red-haired actress in Hollywood was given tests for this coveted part and it was only after Miss Harlow had promised to change the color of her hair that she was given the part. This story, though offering excellent entertainment for adult minds, cannot be recommended for children.
