Step in Medford—Loring Portland as the Studio theater with the latest R. C. A. Photophone sound equipment. Walter H. Leverette, the new owner, announced yesterday that tests of the sound reproduction of the Studio have proved it better than in any theater anywhere. The new equipment has improvements that have been added only during the last few months.

Studio Theater Has New Sound Device

New projection machines and a new screen have also been installed. The theater will have a small stage and several rows of seats in the back have been raised to give a clear vision from every part of the house.

A new curtain in front of the screen and a marquee over the sidewalk will be installed during the next few days. The marquee is being manufactured in Medford by the Standard Neon company. It will have the name of the theater and modernistic designs in five different colors.

Mr. Leverette, who owns theaters in Grants Pass, Ore., and Yreka, Calif., will be in active charge of the Studio.

Today, Monday and Tuesday the Studio will show "The Lost Squadron," starring Richard Dix.

In Holly Hit

Lee Tracy in "The Night Mayor"

"Night Mayor," which opens at the Holly theatre today affords thoroughly enjoyable and highly unique entertainment. The subject is prolific with possibilities, and the author has made it entirely plausible, glamorous, romantic and exciting. The dialogue scintillates with clever and humorous repartee, and the plot as it unfolds furnishes an undercurrent of big-town politics for the edification of the male members of the audience; and for the women there are party scenes galore, with all the modern clothes the eye can take in.

Bobby Kingston, mayor of a large city, is an honest and capable executive, but is the target of reformers because of his gay night life. Lee Tracy portrays the role of the night mayor and Evelyn Knapp the blond beauty. Other principals in the cast include Eugene Palette, Warren Hymer, and Donald Dillaway.

Short subjects on the Holly program today will include a Silly Symphony Cartoon and The Trans-Atlantic Mystery.

FAIRBANKS AT ROXY TODAY IN MODERN ROLE

For two days, starting today, the Roxy theater will feature Douglas Fairbanks in "Reaching for the Moon." There are thrills, excitement and laughs in this modern story. Doug is cast as a dashing, devil-may-care adventurer in Wall Street, matching wits with millionaires. Bebe Daniels, Edward Everett Horton and Jack Muhlall have important parts in the picture.

RESCUED KITTEN FINDS NEW HOME

Things aren't so bad as they seem, was the theme of a little black kitten's purring Friday morning, when he curled himself up in a right tidy knot in the McCurdy-Daniels office. A few minutes before he had been down in the street, cold and hungry and having, what passers-by described as "a fit." He was rescued from the streets by Mrs. Maud Chapman, who is positive that someone threw him there, and was given a plate of warm milk by Mrs. Gwen Parsons. The fit ended and the once hungry kitten began to purr in very loud tones. He is, Mrs. Chapman announces, "very much Persian" in ancestry, and she's going to keep him.

John Gilbert Star Picture At Rialto

"Downstairs," which introduces John Gilbert to his screen fans in a startling new departure as a sinister but colorful villain, shows at the Rialto theatre today and tomorrow.

The story of "Downstairs" was written by Gilbert himself. Originally he intended to direct Erich von Stroheim in it, which gives some hint as to the nature of the extraordinary role in which Gilbert plays all precedents and abandons his former type of romantic heroes for a villainous characterization.

"Downstairs" is a tense drama led in the servants' quarters of an European castle with Gilbert as a chauffeur, spreading a web of intrigue that enmeshes the entire household until a fantastic revenge ends his plotting.

Virginia Bruce, whose betrothal to Gilbert was recently announced, plays the heroine as the maid and Paul Lukas enacts the avenging butler who lures the philandering chauffeur to a horrible doom.
