gate near the Cass ranch, when he found the hat, a pair of overalls, an undershirt, a piece of rope, a pair of shoes, a bit, and a pair of blankets. All gave evidence of having lain in the weather for a year or more. No clues or marks have been found on the articles.

As soon as the weather clears in that section, the sheriff will send a posse to make a thorough inspection and hunt for a grave, or bones.

The hat is of the general type worn by hunters, as protection during the hunting season, and there are tinges of red in the headgear.

No one has been reported missing in that section during the past two years. During that period, however, it has been a favorite section for prospectors, including many transients, who camped there for varying periods.

A thorough investigation will be made by Jackson county authorities, to unravel the elements of mystery in the case.
