SCOTCH TIGHTWAD IDEA AN ERROR IS LAUDER ASSERTION

(By Eva Nealon Hamilton.)

"Here to sing and to make the people laugh again"—with that, the perpetual explanation for his being wherever he happens to be—Sir Harry Lauder, whose songs have traveled on the winds of every country from Zululand to China, back again to the Scottish highlands, and over the seas and home again, for 30 years, and five times around the world—leaped back in his bed at the Hotel Medford this morning to puff his friendly pipe, with fingers still marked with the "coal of less prosperous days."

"It's my weather-glass," he said of his pipe, resting elbows on his Scotch plaid blanket. "When I can't smoke there's something wrong. It was a wee one I smoked when a boy of 12, working in the mill. At the playhouse at Arbroath I made my first appearance. I sang 'The Poor I'm a Gentleman Still.' And I was," he added, with another emptying of his pipe into the ash tray. "I sang to make them cry then. It was in the atmosphere. Now I sing to make them laugh. I raise my audience to my own enthusiasm."

On the stage tonight at the Craterian theater, he then announced, "I'll do it again; you watch and see. First their feet begin to move, then like a flash the rhythm has traveled to the mind. I love to catch the response of a new audience. They are not aware of what is happening to them. My old audiences know what's going on."

"It's the same the world over," Sir Harry Lauder continued, from the Zulu audience, head-tilted to the sophisticated New Yorker. The world responds to rhythm and the simplicity and sincerity of the folk song. "It must be real to live on," he added. "All my songs are stories based on love and domestic trouble. Wherever you go, you know, everywhere, every day, some one is loving and someone is hickering. It's fundamental. I get them with my rhythm, be it fast or slow."

Coaxed back to talk of Scotland, and asked for an answer to the old Scotch joke, Sir Harry laughed. "It originated in America. We laugh at you because it's all wrong. The Scotch are the most generous people in the world. You should have been a bit thrifty yourselves during the past few years. You wouldn't be in such a panic today." He returned to puffing on his pipe.

Mr. Lauder is accompanied by his niece, Miss Greta Lauder, who goes everywhere with him, and who will run his new home, now under construction 17 miles from Glasgow. Tonight he will sing, among other songs, one of his most famous and most popular, "Roamin' in the Gloamin'." Also "Wee Hoose 'Mang the Heather."

Get No Ducks—"Quack, quack!" is the call going out to Dr. R. C. Mullholland today, and that's nearest thing to a duck he has seen, he admitted this morning, following return from a hunting jaunt with Dr. R. C. VanVelsan and Ashland friends. They visited the Agency lake region and found nothing left of the ducks but a few feathers. With appetites still with them and nothing with which to satisfy them, they returned to the city, "addened men."
