LOSS OF HIS AIDES GIVES SNELL TASK IN 73RD CONGRESS

By Herbert Plummer

WASHINGTON — Bertrand Snell of New York, Republican leader of the house, must look with something akin to dismay at the job that faces him in the 73rd congress.

The Democratic sweep of November 8th not only left gaping holes in his ranks on the left side of the political aisle, but it also tore from his side his most powerful and trusted lieutenants.

First of all, Earl Michener of Michigan will be lost to him. The short, curly-haired Michener has been Snell's right-hand man. He, perhaps more than any other Republican, is closest to the floor leader in the actual direction of G. O. P. forces in the house.

Also snatched from his side is another stalwart, Fred Purnell of Indiana. Purnell shared with Michener the confidence of the leader. In the rough and tumble of debate Snell invariably had one on his right and the other on his left.

That veteran of 18 years in the house, Will Wood of Indiana, former chairman of the powerful appropriations committee, passes from the scene, too.

Snell always summoned the gray-haired, relentless Wood to the quarterdeck when the battle shifted to the fiscal policies of the government. Wood was ready at all times for the call.

Snell in the next congress must even find him a new whip. The Democratic sweep carried with it Carl Bachmann of West Virginia, who holds that job.

He must also get along without the counsel of Col. Johnny Tilson of Connecticut, formerly Republican leader of the house, and Willis Hawley of Oregon, his tax and tariff expert. Tilson resigned and Hawley went down to defeat in the primaries.

Just whom he will select to "carry on" in the places of these departed ones, only time will tell. He still will have a number to choose from.

Fred Britten of Illinois is a good fighter. He can depend on Ike Bacharach of New Jersey. James M. Beck of Pennsylvania, one of the most scholarly men in the house, also will be available.

NO FILM DOUBLES ASSUME RISK FOR DAREDEVIL O'BRIEN

By ROBBIN COONS.

HOLLYWOOD—The movie accident recently in which a "double" was injured while on location for a George O'Brien picture caused the report to circulate that husky George must be weakening, since one of his proudest claims has been that he never uses "doubles."

But it develops that it's all a mistake. The man who was hurt was representing the heroine, Maureen O'Sullivan, and not George.

"At the time of the accident, O'Brien says, "the man was wearing a wig and a woman's riding habit, as the scene in question was much too dangerous for any woman to undertake."

Only twice in his career, avers George, has he used a "double." On both occasions, several years ago, he was asked to do a "running w" in a scene. A "running w," illegal now, consists of forcibly tripping a horse while at full speed—"and my objections," he declares "were solely on the grounds that it was brutal and inhumane."

Beginning as a stunt man, O'Brien has had numerous narrow escapes in the making of westerns, one movie form which retains a certain amount of actual thrills in the filming. Among those close calls have been a near-drowning, when his horse became panic-stricken while swimming him across a lake; a crash on horseback in which his mount landed on his chest—and he still wears adhesive tape from that one, although it happened several weeks ago; broken ribs from a fight scene; a broken foot-bone from a high dive, and similar flirtations with risk.

Probably his closest call came in "The Rainbow Trail." He had a scene requiring him to ride over a huge rock at the Grand Canyon. The scene was taken easily enough, and [illegible] well. But a few hours later that rock, for no apparent reason, left its moorings and hurtled down the canyon side!

Lee Tracy's studio troubles notwithstanding, he continues to be in demand for new roles. Latest is at Universal for "Private Jones." Looks like a case of performance outweighing minor difficulties.

Hunger Marchers Number But 795

WASHINGTON, Nov. 28. — (AP) — Police said today a check-up with authorities in various cities showed 795 demonstrators on their way to the capital. They contrasted this figure with the contention of the unemployed councils of America that a minimum of 3,000 would assemble in Washington for an unemployment demonstration on the opening of congress Monday.

Three Burned to Death.

CEDAR KEY, Fla., Nov. 28.—(AP)—Three prisoners were burned to death today when flames said by authorities to have been started by the men in an effort to burn holes in the floor through which to escape, destroyed the city jail here.
