

SPECIAL ENVOY TO WOO BRITISH FOR ARGENTINA

Fluent and Cosmopolitan Vice-President Going to Repay Visits of Prince of Wales and Seek Trade

By GIDEON D. SEYMOUR.
BUENOS AIRES—(AP)—Argentina is sending her fluent and cosmopolitan vice-president, Julio Argentino Roca, to London this month to repay the visits of the Prince of Wales and to woo the chiefs of empire for realignment of Anglo-Argentine trade.

The traditional commercial curricula between the two countries have been diverted by the Ottawa agreements, tariffs and exchange restrictions.

Seeks New Pact.
Dr. Roca sails December 14, and after he has golfed, danced, ridden and flown in the prince, and has used his Oxford English to voice Argentine appreciation for past British friendliness, he will have some conversations with leaders of the British state.

Out of these, it is hoped, will come a trade agreement adjusted to the stresses of mutual crises.

Argentina wants to insure English markets for her wheat, meat and corn. England wants fair treatment for her $3,000,000,000 investments in Argentina. Also she would like to sell Argentina more British goods to offset the English money paid to Argentina for food.

The stoutness of the cords which have bound the two countries for a century will be examined in detail for perhaps the first time during the visit of Vice-President Roca.

English Stake Largest.
Spain gave Argentina its language, the United States influenced its essential forms of government, but England is the mother of its economic life.

There are three hundred English dollars invested in Argentina for every inhabitant, a stake seven times as great as that of the United States.

But figures tell the story incompletely. An Argentine writer recently summed up homelier lies. The English, he said, are responsible for the Argentine custom of having daily. They taught Argentina to drink tea every afternoon.

Sports Also British.
Argentina's national sport, soccer football, which draws 50,000 to a single game, was introduced by the English. The English built the first golf courses, the first tennis courts and the first polo field.

It is Dr. Roca's task to convince England that Argentina values the relationship which came to it so effortlessly, and is prepared to make any fair concession to maintain it.
