ments, and they are responsible for the conduct of their offices and appointments. Following the incidents at the courthouse Wednesday, the consensus throughout the city was that "the time has come to cut out the vaudeville and get back to earth." At the Wednesday afternoon session of the county court, a petition signed by 75 residents of the Eagle Point district was presented, asking that Lester Throckmorton be named road supervisor. There are 12 road districts, and three road supervisors, and more than 50 applicants for the place, county court members say.

NEW LEGISLATORS LEARN ROPES AT CAPITAL QUICKLY

Beyond a rattling back of them is the gallery. On the well labeled desks of each representative is his "property" volume of the Oregon code, Oregon laws, paper files and other aids to the manufacture of laws. The representatives from each county have adjoining desks. Jackson county's two are flatteringly located, practically under the speaker's nose. And whether this had anything to do with it or not, they were both selected to serve on the same flatteringly prominent committee today. It was that of assessment and taxation. Perhaps because of their comparative youth and enthusiasm (or perhaps it's the spirit of the times) this year's house of representatives seemed obsessed with two ideas—speed and economy. They even ignored the senate's action earlier in the day and set a dollar a day off their clerk's and stenographer's salaries. And what a batch of inverted "oussings" that brought forth both during and after the afternoon session. Earl Snell, the 35-year-old speaker, whose green shirt and henna tie added a note of color to the dry preliminaries of the morning session, reminded one of a young auctioneer. His vibrant voice is charged with action and is ever alert to readjust any horse and buggy brand of procedure. And there were a cart or two before a couple of parliamentary horses before some of the newcomers got their bearings. But before the first day was over one couldn't distinguish the freshmen from the veterans. They became a unit—the machinery of government, oiled and assembled for a new output. And as they poured out of the capitol building tonight, some of them

Ashlanders To Give Religious Program KMED Sunday Morn A series of Sunday broadcasts over KMED, from 9 to 10 a. m., are being presented and arranged by Allen O. Hess, and this coming week the choir from the Methodist Episcopal church at Ashland will present the music, of which Harry Yeo will have charge. Rev. Sighey Hall, pastor of the Ashland M. E. church, will be the guest speaker, and gospel songs are to be sung. The first program in the series was presented last week, and many letters and messages of appreciation were received by the radio station, it was learned.

FIFER DEFEATS LAGESON IN ELK CLUB CUE PLAY

The balkline handicap tournament at the Elks club is beginning to get interesting. Last night R. D. Fifer defeated Dr. Lageson, the score 160 to 99, making a handicap of 70 points. Roy Pruitt plays E. W. Winkle tonight, handicap of 110 to 100. As the tournament approaches the second half of play the score board shows D. R. Wood and Roy Pruitt to be the only undefeated players. Yet there is plenty of time for upsets, in fact it appears that the last half will develop into a real battle. Members of eight bowling teams met at the Elks' Temple last night and outlined a bowling tournament, starting Monday night, January 8th, and running for 10 weeks, according to Roy Pruitt, chairman of the bowling committee. Captain of the teams will be selected tonight, and an announcement of the players and schedules will be made soon. Pruitt stated that the winners will be rewarded with some very handsome prizes and all the teams are "pepped" up to bowl to win.
