

Buying Barbara

by Julia Cleft-Addams • Author of "YOU CAN'T MARRY"

SYNOPSIS: Barbara Queen, the girl of the hour, does not know that Barbara has been bought by Farrell Armitage. She is to go to Armitage's house in London the day he and Barbara were to be married. Farrell's plan is to try to cure Mark's loneliness, and to launch him as an artist. Farrell's ally is Leticia, the girl he would have married had he not fallen in love with Barbara at sight. Barbara has gone to see Mark.

Chapter 19 MARK'S PLAN

"MARK!" exclaimed Barbara. "Mark, who usually at this hour permitted himself a dressing-gown, was in dress-clothes, the perfection of exactitude, delicately pleated shirt and pearl cuff-links. Only his crutch was the crutch of common every-day and even that managed to enhance his good looks and give appeal to his halting progress."

"What, in heaven's name, has got you?"

"I thought I'd have a dress-parade," said Mark. "A chap like Armitage gets himself up like this every night, you know. Has to, or his friends might forget what a perfect little gentleman he is. Only, his clothes fit him most excellently well and this whole thing's wrong. I was a fool not to see it at once. He made his way to Barbara's chair and sank into it. Barbara came swiftly across the room and caught the crutch as he let it away towards her. (He still had not met her eyes)."

"Armitage, of course, will expect the sort of get-up they wear in La Bohème—velvet coat and soft shirt open at the throat and dove-grey trousers, strapped under the instep. God, shan't I look a fool! But, after all, he'll be paying for it."

Mrs. Lodely, not knowing whether to take this seriously or not, found refuge in irrelevant surmise. "Well, I don't know—I always did think you looked nice in fancy dress. Do you remember that time Leticia came took you to an Albert Hall carnival or something up in London and you were an old man with a barrel-organ and she was a gypsy-dancer in green chiffon, chained to your wrist? You ought to have had a prize, I thought, going all that way. And I remember afterwards I asked her if she enjoyed herself and she said no, she hadn't particularly."

"Strange!" mused Mark, faintly smiling. "I remember that I enjoyed myself, quite."

Barbara, still holding the crutch, still looking at him, began absurdly to tremble. She knew that when her trembling passed into her hand the crutch would begin to rattle on the floor and Mark would turn his faint, dreadful smile upon her.

She saw his smile as through an emerald mist; sensed, for a moment, how lightly the jewel had lain upon flesh that was smooth and bare. . . The crutch was tapping; an irritating, trifling rhythm.

"Oh, thank you," said Mark politely. He took the crutch from her shaking hands, slowly and carefully lifted it across his knees and propped it up next to him, against the mantelpiece. "Thank you, I oughtn't to have troubled you to hold it."

Mrs. Lodely had returned to the fire. "If we do go up to stay with Mr. Armitage's I suppose both of us'll need a bit of smartening."

"Wait till we're at Brandish Place and I'll get clothes from Armitage."

"My dear boy, he's not going to keep us in clothes and pocket-money just because he's asked us to come and spend a few days with him! And besides you can't take money from a stranger—it's thunderin' bad form."

"Oh, but I'm expected to behave badly, my Judy. Really he'll be chagrined if I don't. Besides, I shall just have got married to Barbara. Large hearted woman like Armitage never refuses a little pecuniary assistance to a weaker brother on his wedding-day."

There was a pause. Then Mrs. Lodely leapt gladly into the breach. "There, now, I to! Babs you could get married on Thursday just as arranged, if you did it before we start for Town! I'm sure if you do it first thing on Thursday Babs'll be quite satisfied, won't you Babs?"

"Has Barbara been dissatisfied because I haven't married her yet?"

"Now you know well enough I never meant anything like that!"

protected Mrs. Lodely, as she heaved herself to her feet and, announcing loudly that she would see about some supper, got herself out of the room.

As the door closed behind her, Mark's head fell forward. His lips were white and his whole frame twitched sharply. In an instant Barbara was kneeling by his side, her arm across his shoulders, the other hand seeking to hold him up.

"Lean back, Mark. It's all right, I have you safe. Lean back, dear."

An anguish shook her heart. Oh, to have the power of a man like Farrell Armitage! Not only his wealth but his suaveness, his single purpose, his strength, nervous and physical—to be able to pick Mark up and carry him out into the sunshine that was his by every right.

His eyelids fluttered just as she began to think that she must call Judy to bring a stimulant. She had perhaps fanned the name, for Mark whispered—

"I don't want her. She makes such a row. Keep her away for a little longer."

"Poor dear Judy!" She bent till her face rested against his head. "She's rather a wonderful mother, really."

"She might be if she didn't make such a noise about it. One reason I shall always need you, Barbara, is that you are my tranquillity."

Incredible happiness to hear him murmur that. Incredible happiness to feel his weight against her shoulder, his languid hands under hers. A tide of peace washed up over the conflict of her thoughts and the world went empty of everything but Mark and herself and his need of her.

White ash powdered and fell from the burning log into the fire. ". . . Never kiss me, don't you know it?"

Every nerve in her leapt, started. Someone had spoken in her ear? Before she could stop herself her head had jerked up and round, her eyes raking the shadows of the room. "Don't you know it?" It echoed in her ears—no, not in her ears, in her mind. Farrell Armitage was speaking in her mind—and her mind had responded with instant recognition!

A muffled exclamation from Mark as her violent movement shifted his head smartly to the chair-back. "Barbara! And I called you tranquil!"

She made no plea for forgiveness. She withdrew her arm from him and, stumbling to her feet, peered about her.

"My darling beautiful, is there a ghost?"

"No. Yes. She was panting. "I thought I heard—Did you hear a voice say—something?"

His eyes were so bright, so amused, that she almost believed he could read her secret. What if all that had passed last night were spread before him, like a book? What if the miles between this house and that other new one were uncounted, mere walls of glass?

"The wedding is to be at nine, Barbara, instead of twelve. After which, my girl, you'll come aboard the plutocrat's car with us and stay at Brandish Place, too. He won't mind. He'll probably like it—I should say he's the kind that rather enjoys having a pretty creature hanging upon his every word. It's futile to tell when you can walk. Besides—" the gleam in his eyes deepened, but not because of her—"besides, there may be no need for toll any more. I've got Armitage."

"What do you mean?"

"Don't snap. You've a beautiful voice and you should always speak slowly and beautifully. . . I mean that when a big motioned brute like that thinks he'll patronize art with a capital A the rest is easy. Oh, I know a lot of these rich louts get sick of their proteges and drop them, but if you log in to it you'll find that the protege asked for it, all right. When I get to Brandish Place I shall ask nothing for my own sake but everything for the sake of Art."

"So that is all settled," he yawned. "And we shall have a honeymoon after all, Barbara, but under the millionaire's roof."

"No!"

"When do we marry, then, if at all?"

"Not for at least a year." He only smiled.

JACKSONVILLE GRANGE SPECIAL MEETING FOR WINDING UP OLD YEAR

JACKSONVILLE, Jan. 5.—(Sp.)—A special meeting of the Jacksonville Grange was called last Friday evening by Worthy Master I. A. Dew to get matters in readiness for the new year. Reports of retiring officers were given by Retiring Master Chester Wendt, Secretary C. O. Sanden, and Treasurer Geo. Flak.

A special plea was given by Worthy Master Dew for an even greater degree of cooperation from the different departments of the Grange to boost the Grange thru the next year. The strength of the Grange, he believes, rests for a great part in the hands of the committees and the following committees were appointed with much consideration:

Marketing: Henry Conger, A. E. Brockway, Henry Niedermeyer. Legislative: W. B. Cruse, O. E. Simons, Ernest Langley. Reception: C. C. Hooper, Claire Hanley, Ted Sims. Relief: Rev. Jones, Geo. Flak, Carl Niedermeyer.

Bad Odor Not Basis For Suit

VANCOUVER, Wash., Jan. 5.—(AP)—"Obnoxious odors" from a pulp mill do not constitute a basis upon which a suit for damage may be built, in the opinion of Judge H. E. McKenney of Vancouver.

He yesterday annulled the verdict of a jury which last month awarded $3000 to Paul Hine of Canas for alleged damage by odors from the Crown Willamette Paper company mill at Canas.

NOTED MEMBERS OF BAR TO TALK IN RADIO SERIES

Hon. Clarence Martin, president of the American Bar Association, and a number of others of the bench and bar of the law teaching profession will be on the program of a series of weekly radio addresses over a national hookup under the sponsorship of the American Bar Association, to commence on the evening of February 12. Three ex-presidents of the American Bar Association, the dean of the Harvard Law School, the president of the American Law Institute, the most recent recipient of the American Bar Association medal, the president of the American Judicature Society and other well known speakers will participate.

The title given to the entire series, "The Lawyer and the Public," is suggestive of the general purpose of the project, which is to acquaint the layman with the efforts being made by the bar to improve the administration of justice and to show the great difficulties which lie in the way of this task. The part which the American Bar Association is playing in law reform will be brought out and the necessity for lawyers, thru bar organization, to speak with a united voice will be emphasized.

The Columbia Broadcasting Company has contributed the radio time and the addresses will be made under the auspices of the National Advisory Council on Radio in Education.

One or two additional names may be added but the speakers and their subjects will be substantially as follows:

Clarence Martin, president of the American Bar Association—"The American Bar, Its Past Leaders and Its Present Aims and Ideals."

Roccoe Pound, dean of the Harvard Law School—"Training for the Bar."

George W. Wickersham, president of the American Law Institute—"Restating the Law."

John Kirkland Clark, chairman Section of Legal Education of the American Bar Association—"The Lawyer's Education."

John H. Wigmore, dean emeritus, Northwestern University Law School—"Should the Public Distrust a Lawyer?"

Silas Strawn, former president of the American Bar Association and of the United States Chamber of Commerce—"The Lawyer and Business."

Guy A. Thompson, former president of the American Bar Association—"What is the Bar Doing to Improve the Administration of Justice?"

Henry W. Toll, managing director American Legislators Association—"Reforming the Law Through Legislation."

Philip J. Wickaer, secretary New York Board of Law Examiners, Hon. Theodore Francis Green, governor of Rhode Island, and Robert T. Me-

Cracken, chairman of the Philadelphia County Board of Law Examiners—"Sitting Candidates for a Lawyer's License."

Newton D. Baker—"When Lawyers Speak With One Voice."

"How the Law Functions in Society," a symposium by Professor Karl Llewellyn of the Columbia University Law School, Professor Walter Wheeler Cook of the Institute of Law of Johns Hopkins University and Mr. Jerome Frank.

Professor Felix Frankfurter of the Harvard Law School, on a subject to be announced later.

John W. Davis—"Selecting Judges."

PORTLAND BANK DEPOSITS GROW

PORTLAND, Ore., Jan. 5.—(AP)—A growth of bank deposits in Portland of $715,355 between October 5 last, and December 31, was shown in statements issued in response to the national and state bank call yesterday.

Deposits here reached a total of $131,485,265 on the last day of 1932, as compared with $130,769,910 on October 5, 1932.

Deposit totals on last October 5 amounted to $5,900,000 more than the figures of the preceding June 30 report and bankers say the current gain indicates a steady growth.

DENY CLOSING OF WHITE ELEPHANT THEATER CENTRE

NEW YORK, Jan. 5.—(AP)—M. H. Aylesworth, president of Radio-Keith-Orpheum, confirmed reports early today that a change in policy is to be made in the two huge theaters in Rockefeller center which were opened only last week.

He denied that the four-million dollar RKO-Roxy, a combination picture-vaudeville house seating 3,700 persons, would close, as published reports had said. He stated, however, that changes in policy would be effected.

The Daily News said today that following last night's performance at the RKO-Roxy, notice was posted that the theater, which had its gala opening a week ago tonight, would close January 11. The announcement of the closing was credited to Bill Stren, manager.

The Aylesworth statement said that Radio City Music Hall, seating 6,200 persons, would change from its two-day variety-spectacle policy to a combination of pictures and vaudeville, running continuously.

He did not state what the policy of the RKO-Roxy would be, but said it would be a "new type of entertainment adapted to the more intimate character of that theater."

OVER 300 ENTER ASHLAND NORMAL

ASHLAND, Jan. 5.—(Sp.)—With Tuesday marking the opening of the winter term at the Southern Oregon Normal school, student registration Wednesday passed the 300 mark and new students were arriving with each rain and bus in the city.

It was hoped with the registrations continuing for a few days as they have been a newhigh enrollment will be reached.

At the full quarter a registration of 330 students was reported and the winter term is expected to exceed that number.

Many new students are arriving in the city to start studies at the normal school as well as a good return of old students.

Running Smelt Spring Harbinger

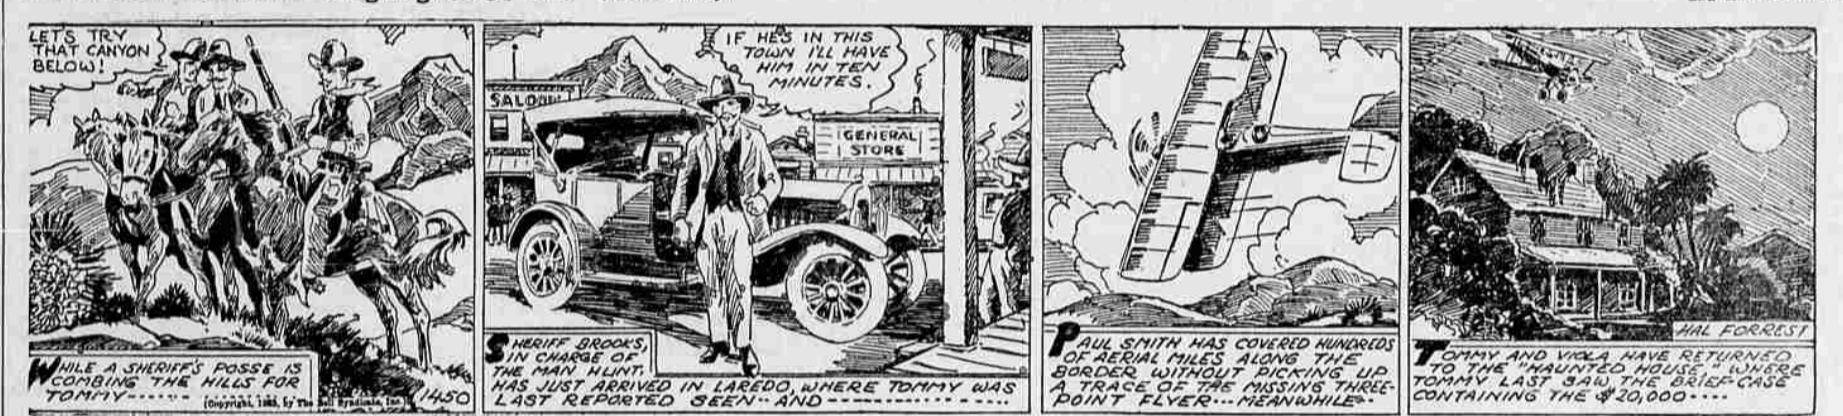

PORTLAND, Jan. 5.—(AP)—Columbia river smelt have entered the Cowlitz river and "old-timers" are predicting an early spring.

It is an unusually early period for smelt to enter the Cowlitz, since they usually do not arrive until Feb. 1. It generally takes two months for the fish to appear in Sandy river after they are first reported in the Cowlitz.
