INJURED MAN HERE TO BE NEAR WIFE Ellis Nelson, 51, who suffered a fractured leg when his automobile left the highway between Woodland and Knight's Landing, Calif., has returned to Medford by train, to join Mrs. Nelson, who is seriously ill here.

Mr. Nelson had been working in that district when he received word of his wife's illness, and was en route here from Vallejo, having left that city about 2 a. m. Tuesday. Blinded by lights of an approaching car, his machine skidded on the highway.

The injury to his leg, caused shoulder muscles. For several hours he lay at the side of the highway, he said, and motorists who would stop to view the wreck, drove on without hearing his cries. About six in the morning he was successful in attracting the attention of a laborer in a neighboring field, who assisted him to a hospital.

Mrs. Beers Buried January 11 is Word Funeral services were conducted January at Scotsburg cemetery for Mrs. Cora L. Beers of Elkton, Ore., who died December 29 after a few hours' illness, it was learned in Medford yesterday.

Surviving her are her daughter, Mrs. C. D. Mohley of Elkton, who formerly resided in this city, a son, C. R. Beers of Denver, Colo., and one sister in California.

That TECHNOCRACY Question

Editor's Note: This is the second of six daily articles about Technocracy whose predictions of possible economic collapse started a farflung controversy. The articles give a new insight into Technocracy and present other statistics pertaining to the displacement of men by machines, energy consumption, debts and other points involved.

By J. R. BRACKETT. (Copyright, 1932, By The Associated Press.)

NEW YORK (AP)—Energy is Technocracy's fundamental word. It is on the basis of the rapid increase in the use of energy that Howard Scott, Technocracy's director, has stated that drastic changes must be made in this economic system to avert it from possible collapse.

Technocracy is the name of a group of engineers working at Columbia university in an "Energy Survey of North America," the purpose of which is simply, according to public statements, to make a technical analysis which, if successful, the Technocrats believe would indicate necessary corrections in the economic system.

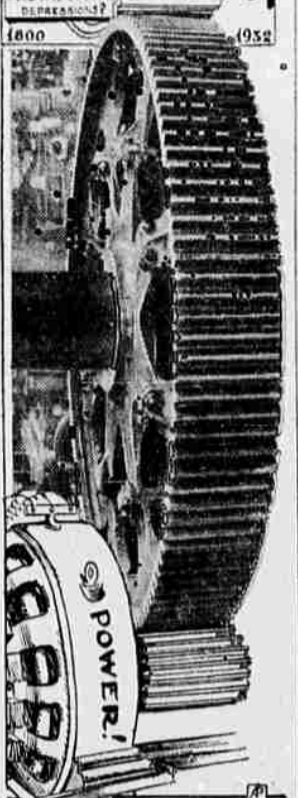

Here is why Scott believes energy is so important: 1. For all the years of man's history up to about 1800, he used the energy resources of the earth at about the rate of 2,000 Calories per capita (a measure of energy) per day. He used little coal, no electricity, and scarcely any of the devices which need energy. Then suddenly the machines came, and today man uses about 150,000 Calories per capita per day—a gain of 75 times.

2. But, in the meantime, man did not change materially his methods of directing society. What change there was probably occurred at a rate similar to the rate at which it has changed in all history in other words energy flowed into the social mechanism at a rate entirely new in history, and society was not prepared to cope with that change.

3. The result has been a disorderly and fluctuating use of energy, resulting in fluctuating in production of goods, depression and unemployment. The nation has attempted to progress, figuratively speaking, in an ocean equipped with a 1,000 horsepower airplane engine. This, Technocracy believes, will become increasingly difficult.

Other economists have stressed particularly revealing, pointing out the importance of power, but some of them object to the greater stress which Technocracy has given it. They further consider that comparison between 1800 and now is not

No. 2 - Machines and Power

An increasing use of energy or power to drive machinery is causing business fluctuations says Technocracy. The chart at top illustrates the point, showing a theoretical business curve going up and down and deeper and higher and often as energy consumption gains.

Other economists have stressed particularly revealing, pointing out the importance of power, but some of them object to the greater stress which Technocracy has given it. They further consider that comparison between 1800 and now is not

Economics in Washington has written that "the industrial production of a nation may be gauged by its use of power."

He calculated an index of energy consumption between 1899 and 1926 and found that, using 1899 as 100, consumption in U. S. increased to 310—about three times.

Going back to 1849 and using actual heat measurements, he calculated that production in 1849, not including water power for which there were no figures was 173 trillion B. T. U., a measure of energy; that by 1899, including water power, it was 7,245 trillion B. T. U., and 1923, it was 24,434 trillion B. T. U.

Technocracy's statistics are that 1924 energy production in 1840 was 75 trillion B. T. U., and that it was 27,000 trillion B. T. U. in 1923—a gain of 353 times.

Technocracy said most of this increase has occurred since 1900, when, according to Technocracy, production was 2,640 trillion B. T. U. This latter figure compares to Tryon's 7,245 trillion B. T. U. for 1899. The two groups of statistics may not be exactly comparable due to differences in methods of computation. They are similar for the last decade, however.

Neither set of figures makes comparable calculations relating the growth of energy to growth in population. Since population increased, the per capita gain of energy was not as great as the total gain.

Tryon calculated that energy consumed increased at about the rate of 5 to 7 per cent per year after 1899, as compared to an increase in the physical volume of production of 4 per cent per year. Comparing 1899 to 1916, Tryon found that population gained a total of 35 per cent; physical volume of agricultural, manufacturing, and mining production, and railroad transportation increased a total of 80 per cent, and energy production 150 per cent.

As to what machines used this energy, Carol Boop Daugherty, in a 1916, Geological Survey Bulletin, has calculated that, using 1899 as 100, capacity to use power increased from 16 to 1099 if automobiles are included. If autos are not included, the change was from 16 to 399.

This indicates that much more than half of the consumption of energy was accounted for by the automobiles in using oil and gas, and that by excluding autos from the general computation of B. T. U. the gains would not seem so important as an influence on production.

HAM CLUB VISITS REPEATER OFFICE

Fleet Club, engineer at the Medford repeater station of the American Telephone and Telegraph company on North Bartlett street, Friday night conducted 24 members of the Amateur Radio Club of Southern Oregon through the long distance repeater plant. The group declared it was one of the most interesting and educational meetings held by the club.

Mr. House explained how regular long distance telephone and telegraph messages are relayed along the Pacific coast, across the continent and over oceans if necessary. He showed how the plant is equipped with storage batteries which will operate the entire plant for a day and a half without external source of power.

Gas-driven generators are also available for operation if power is not obtainable then, he said. Next meeting of the ham club will be January 27 in Ashland at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Max Crowson at 461 Iowa street. Mr. Crowson operates amateur radio station W7DK.
