Bray Home, Scene Of M. E. Mission Society Session

By MRS. R. J. BILLS

The Mission Society of the M. E. church, South, met at the home of Mrs. J. P. Bray on Lozier Lane, Tuesday afternoon. Thirty members and friends of the society were present. Mrs. Peters was leader of the program which was arranged in the form of a missionary class meeting. Those taking part related incidents from the various homes and foreign mission fields. From Africa came the report of the peasant of the nativity being given to celebrate Christmas. In spite of the political situation, is the most promising field, and has produced the fairest laurels. The local field is not being neglected. Members are reporting donations to the relief organizations. The society recently met at the home of Mrs. Peters for the Red Cross. A letter was read from the "Home-Tabernacle" home in Los Angeles for the Christmas box. The society sends a box each year to the orphanage.

Where Safeway School Is Planned

Julia Wright, director of Home-makers' Bureau, discussing the 1933 series of cooking schools which are being conducted by the Safeway Stores during 1933.

"In expensive, but well balanced and appetizing meals to offset that salary cut."

This is the slogan of Mrs. Marion Spencer and Miss Helen Brown, expert home economists of the Safeway Stores' Home-makers' Bureau, while waiting for prosperity to come skipping around the corner.

These cooking experts will direct a three-day cooking school in Medford, sponsored by the Safeway Stores, beginning Wednesday, February 1, at the Fox Rialto. Hours of the session will be from 2 until 4 p. m., with doors open at 1 p. m., and all information gathered by the bureau and its testing kitchen in more than a year of research work will be revealed to homemakers, with the family budget always in mind.

With Julia Wright, famous western home economist, in charge the Safeway Home-makers' Bureau has the distinction of being the only organization of its kind in the west. Therefore, it is looked upon as the criterion by western women. Acting as a clearing house and scientific testing department for household culinary problems, it maintains a staff of nine university and practically trained young women home economists, including the director, Mrs. Wright.

As the date of the school opening draws close, homemakers of Medford are urged by Mrs. Spencer and Miss Brown to prepare to attend, equipped with pencil and paper, even though printed programs will be issued, for many interesting kitchening facts are on the list for note taking, and all questions will be answered, either orally or by mail. During the two hours of sessions each day, ten varied items of meals or luncheons will be prepared.

"The Home-makers' Bureau not only makes every effort to learn the most modern homemakers' ideas developed in other parts of the country, but it contributes many ideas of its own," these economists say.

Letters in response to Mrs. Wright's network radio broadcasts and thousands of other questions in the mail serve as a barometer to western women's needs and desires, it is explained.

Cooking school sessions are free of charge, and each day the finished table products, besides market baskets of groceries will be distributed to various members of the class.

Mrs. Spencer emphasized that the service of the Home-makers' Bureau and its kitchen is offered free to all as many as 6000 women have attended a single session of the class. Each day of the school will give a varied menu, with many interesting features.

The Houdini of Textiles

Science has perfected something brand new in textiles—Lastex—an elastic fabric that can be made into everything from stretchable socks to suspenders and bathing suits, and which should help the textile industry out of the slump of hard times.

Chapter 1

The logical way to account for the thing is by the supposition that Mr. Percy Adamson had been reading "Alice in Wonderland." You remember how Alice took the contents of a bottle labeled "Drink Me" and she grew littler and littler; and then she consumed a piece of cake marked "Eat Me" and she grew bigger and bigger; both with alarming rapidity. Meanwhile, though, what happened to her clothes? Lewis Carroll says nothing about that; but Tennyson drew the pictures of Alice, took it for granted that the things she wore when she was of normal size still fitted her perfectly when she became a giant, and just as well when she became a midget. A neat trick in clothing; it must have been a comfort to Alice's mother.

Just the same, it would puzzle a practical man like Mr. Adamson. We can imagine him turning the matter over in his mind after dinner, wondering how under the sun clothes could be made to change to different sizes in a jiffy, grow smaller and bigger at will. And then suddenly his forehead as this idea of a lasting elastic textile pops into his brain like the White Rabbit popping into a hole. Obviously, a lasting elastic textile is the only thing that would make clothes suitable for a whimsical stretchable, shrinkable person like Alice.

"Then and there something new was born into the world and christened Lastex. It may be that Alice, the White Rabbit and the March Hare had nothing whatever to do with it. But one may have his own theories. As any rate, Lastex has been in existence only a short time. In fact, it first saw the light of day, publicly speaking, about a year ago. But since that time it has done exactly what Alice did when she ate the cake and grew so fast that in a few minutes she felt she was no longer personally acquainted with her own feet.

In other words, the new product turned out to be an infant prodigy. At the present writing it looks like the most important invention of the textile field since the invention of that other product of the modern laboratory, rayon. But rayon is what it is, Lastex isn't. It is one of those things you look at and don't believe—the fountain of youth.

For instance, Edward F. Roberts, the eager, pipe-smoking Irishman, whose job it is to get people acquainted with Lastex, showed me a pair of pink satin evening gloves—those that go halfway up the arm. They were dainty and made to fit a tiny feminine hand.

ANCIENT SAMPLER PRIZE POSSESSION OF MRS. GRAFFIS

By Eva Nealon Hamilton

Telling the early story of a woman of old Germany, to whom many southern Oregonians owe their "very good start in life," a sampler, brown with age, but with silk threads still holding true to pattern, was brought to Medford recently by Mrs. Donna Graffis of Phoenix.

Dating back more than 100 years to 1807, when completed by Anna Mueller, who was, many years later in a far distant land, to become known to all as "Grandma Barneburg" the sampler reveals the events in the life of the little German girl as well as her fine handiwork in loom and with needle.

Embroidered on hand woven linen, now many shades off from white, appear flowers, a windmill, a dog, boys and girls, and other characters, which held an important place in the mind of Anna Mueller, 13.

The sampler is now held in a frame, covered with glass, which protects it from further wear and was brought to Medford by Mrs. Graffis, granddaughter along with other souvenirs, one of them a photograph of Grandma Barneburg, taken by Peter Brit, pioneer photographer at Jacksonville. It shows a woman quite unaware of the frills on her jaunty bonnet.
