News of Gold Hill—Gold Hill is well known for many things. It is known for the huge cement plant that has furnished barrel upon barrel of material for construction purposes. It is known for the incident that, many years ago, brought it its name—the pocket of gold upon the nearby mountain top that paid hundreds of thousands of dollars to its discoverers because the rose-colored quartz was so rich in the precious metal that the ore could not be melted, but had to be melted down. But it is best known also, and perhaps known best to newspaper men, as the place from which Ben Hur Lampman came to the Oregonian. It was there, back in the year when the Titanic was sunk, that Ben Lampman went into the business of publishing the Gold Hill News and gave it as much of his genius that he was called, four years later, to Portland to become a staff member of this newspaper. Aurele Meunier is at the Heathman from Gold Hill. — The Oregonian.
