AMERICA'S 10 BIGGEST PROBLEMS No. 6. Molding The Next Generation

This is the sixth article in a series in which Prof. William Fielding Ogburn of the University of Chicago discusses what he considers the 10 big problems facing America.

By WILLIAM FIELDING OGBURN, Research Director, President's Committee on Recent Social Trends (Written for the Associated Press)

The personalities that we have are largely the result of our childhood experiences. Whether we are witty, poetic, dreamy, persistent, matter-of-fact, dominating, easy-going, easily led, nervous or steady is largely determined in the early years of our lives.

These traits usually were inherited to be inherited from our fathers and mothers, but they are more truly the result of the association with them and also with our playmates and other childhood associates.

Here the importance of early training and education, for the kind and quality of people we shall have in the next generation, for our nation depend on what we do with the children of today.

Dangers to Be Watched. The life of the modern child is different from what it was in early times in two respects. He grows up in cities and usually in a small family often without any brothers or sisters.

These are dangers, for the manner of city life is often not good for the temperament of children and frequently too restricted association with affectional adults or the neglect of absent parents is not a healthy influence.

But the city and the modern family may be made just as good an influence on child life as it is now frequently a bad influence. The realization of the dangers of childhood is, in a sense, a promise.

The first big problem in this connection is the education of parents. They are hard to reach, for families are scattered, but adult education and parent-teacher associations may do much.

Problem Parents, Too. Our high schools and junior colleges should, of course, educate for parenthood with special courses in those subjects. It is the problem in that makes the concern themselves more with the personalities of children, which means their group activities as well as their books. The modern progressive tendencies in education should be widely diffused throughout the public schools.

The pre-school child in many families needs also the influences of modern progressive education. In many homes children should go to school at earlier ages.

Good homes are an important influence. It is now almost impossible to bring up a child satisfactorily in most city apartments, but with social planning, city apartments could be made almost ideal.

Another need is scientific research. We know that our early environment makes us what we are, within broad limits. We know that any child can be made into a poet or a scientist, but we do not yet know the particular programs.

It would be wonderful to have a world without problem children, to have our society peopled by well-adjusted adults capable of successful mating who cannot become neurotic, without narcissism and free from morbid fears.

But first we need more research and then we need it widely diffused throughout our schools and our homes.

Tomorrow: "Building a Healthy Nation." The average expectancy of life now is 58 years, as compared with 35 years in 1800, says Professor Ogburn. It should be possible to reach three score and ten, he asserts. The problem is not only to conquer cancer, malaria, social diseases, tuberculosis, influenza, kidney and heart disease, but to bring more vigorous health, he says in the next article.

The quality of people in the next generation depends on the training given the children of today, says Prof. William F. Ogburn. And the training of those children, especially in cities, is one of the nation's ten big problems, he says. City children forced to play in the streets, and others being given the proper play training are shown above.

LAST SHOWING OF 'JIM'S GIRL' AT THE CRATERIAN TONITE

An appreciative Medford audience was carried back to early post-war days and all the glamor and recklessness that was trait to the Fox Craterian theater last night when "Jim's Girl," comedy romance, was presented by an all-local cast under auspices of Medford Post, American Legion, Strains of world war music, before and between the acts of the show, added authenticity to the atmosphere when played by Sebastian Apollo, local artist, at the organ.

HEALTH MEANS CHARM AND HAPPINESS

Smiling lips and sparkling eyes speak of health and vitality. Clear skin attracts. The healthy active girl is both happy and popular. Perhaps you are not really ill yet when the day's work is done you are too tired to enter into the good times that other women enjoy. For extra energy, try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. It tones up your general health. Gives you more pep—more charm. Remember that 98 out of 100 women report benefit. Let it help you, too.
