Pinafore Sung to Large And Appreciative Crowd

By Irva Fesell. "Her Majesty's Ship, Pinafore," in port at the senior high school last night for the presentation of the opera, also known as "the lass that loved a sailor," called out of Portsmouth harbor at the close of the presentation with the best crew that ever manned a ship belonging to "Her Majesty." Continued applause rang through the auditorium numerous times until encore numbers and choruses were given and a full house could be heard voicing its approval as the curtains swung together on the last act. Members of the cast played their parts with such true characteristics that compliments on their singing and acting ability, as well as work of their directors, were heard on all sides.

F. Wilson Wait was conductor, Miss Harriet Baldwin director of the glee clubs, and Miss Doris Baier director of dialogue.

Captain Corcoran, commanding the Pinafore, "never, no never—well, hardly ever" overlooked Little Buttercup, the Portsmouth Humboat woman, which part was exceptionally well played by Aileen Guy. George Andrews was the Captain, who later exchanged ranks with Ralph Rackstraw, able seaman, taken by Bob Nelson, who finally won the captain's daughter. More than once the able seaman and the captain, as well as the humboat woman, were called back to sing their enticing little songs.

The boatswain, Bill Lyman, appearing very efficient, sang the verses in time to the ever-present twinkle in his eyes. And Dick Deadeye, able seaman, "whose name was ag'in him," was excellently portrayed by Max Rae. He could click his heels and clear his throat in the manner becoming the first lord of the admiralty—Right Honorable Sir Joseph Porter, K.

stance Cormany, Dorothy Culy, Catharine Chaney, Ruth D'Albini, Mary Enders, Betty Fallon, Anna Mae Fuson, Doris Gass, Marjorie Gregory, Barbara Holt, Constance Moore, Margery Paley, Margaret Pennington, Alene Ray, Doris Rose, Martha Shurtz, Patsy Smith, Helen Stewart, Olivia Todd, Margaret Ward, Dorothy Willis of Jane Westcott, Georgia Webb and Margaret Younger. Much credit is due James Stevens, who was in charge of the makeup for the leading characters, including Dick and his dead eye. Ralph Burgess was also extended acknowledgments and thanks by the school for his assistance in helping portray the navy's technique. Those in various departments of the school who were credited with assisting the success of the production were the art department in charge of Louise Hollenback for programs and setting, and the manual arts department in charge of Leland Mentzer, for stage settings. The deck of the Pinafore appeared quite characteristic, with a twang of salt-air about the correctness of it all. Others assisting in the presentation of the opera were: Physical education department, dance instructor, Miss Carin Degermark; clothing classes, costumes and decorations instructor, Miss Maurine Carroll; journalism department, publicity instructor, Mr. Ralph Bailey; student reports, Margaret Ward and Prentice Petty; commercial department, ticket

sale, instructor, Miss La Vera Moei; business manager, Lucien Clement. To the following who loaned properties or costumes acknowledgment was also made: California Oregon Power Co., Capt. William Stanley, Steven Nye, Walter Olmscheld, Carl Johnson, B. R. Finch, Gilbert Stuart and Mrs. Bill Warner.
