TIME FOR TESTING THERMOMETERS

Pear growers who plan on protecting their orchards from frost this season are advised by County Agent Wilcox to bring their thermometers and frost alarms in to his office for testing.

Roy Rogers, representing the frost protection service department of the United States weather bureau, will arrive in the district within the next week or ten days and thermometer testing will be done at that time.

Oftentimes, during the heat of the summer, the fluid column in the orchard thermometer is broken, thereby making the instrument inaccurate and unreliable. A free service in repairing and testing these instruments is offered by the department. Those desiring the service are asked to bring their thermometers and alarms to the county agent's office at once.
