EMERGENCY RELIEF IN COUNTY TALKED

The County Relief committee met Friday March 17th with Clarence A. Reynolds, western Oregon representative of the state relief committee, and perfected its organization for handling the emergency relief work in Jackson county.

The committee plans to use as many public work projects as it will be possible to find, in order to take care of those who apply for relief during the present emergency. Those who apply for relief and are able to work, will be required to work. The work given to each man will be distributed on the basis set forth in the state law, which says: "The recipient of work relief and the amount given are both determined upon the basis of actual need."

Not everybody who applies for work will be given work or even relief as relief will always be given on the basis of actual need. The wages paid will be the going scale 1 mile community in which the work is being done.
